THE COMMISSION OF THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITIES,

Having regard to the Treaty establishing the European Community, and in particular the first subparagraph of Article 88(2) thereof,

Having regard to the Agreement on the European Economic Area, and in particular Article 62(1)(a) thereof,

Having called on interested parties to submit their comments pursuant to the provisions cited above (1),

Whereas:

1. PROCEDURE

(1) In a letter dated 3 March 2003 (TREN A/26534, 25 July 2003) the Greek authorities underlined their commitment to privatise the State-owned airline Olympic Airways and described the steps they had already taken to that end.

(2) In the absence of a formal notification, the Commission issued an information injunction on 8 September 2003, which was notified to the Greek authorities on 9 September 2003 (C(2003) 3266). This required the Greek authorities to provide all the information necessary to enable the Commission to examine whether the measures for the restructuring and privatisation of Olympic Airways were compatible with Article 87 of the Treaty.

(3) On the same day the Commission wrote to the Greek authorities (TREN D/15287) insisting that they should notify the Commission of the law providing for the privatisation of Olympic Airways, which was adopted on 9 September 2003. By letter dated 17 September 2003 (TREN A/30881), the Greek authorities stated that they intended to submit this information in due course.

(4) On 25 September 2003 the Commission received an official complaint about the privatisation of Olympic Airways from a competitor, Aegean Airlines (TREN A/30589).

(5) The Privatisation Law and the reply to the information injunction were sent to the Commission by letter dated 29 September 2003 (TREN A/30866). Certain information was still missing, however, and the Commission advised the Greek authorities accordingly, by letter dated 31 October 2003 (TREN D/17821), a copy of which was also subsequently faxed to the Greek Permanent Representation on 4 December 2003.

(6) On 12 December 2003, before the Commission had completed its examination of the compatibility with Article 87 of the Treaty of the measures for the restructuring and privatisation of Olympic Airways, a new company came into being, under the name ‘Olympic Airlines’. The information injunction proceedings initiated by the Commission on 8 September 2003 were therefore now entered in the State aid register under case number NN 4/03.

(7) On 15 December 2003 (TREN D/22742), the Commission reiterated its request for information on the privatisation; the Greek authorities provided the information requested by letters dated 18 and 19 December 2003 (TREN A/38288 and TREN A/38258).

(8) On 15 January 2004, a new request for additional information was sent to the Greek authorities (TREN D/160), who replied in two letters both dated 16 January 2004 (TREN A/11076 and TREN A/11077).

On 16 January 2004 the Commission wrote to the Greek authorities regarding Athens International Airport ('AIA'), at Spata, and its ongoing relationship with Olympic Airways/Airlines. The Greek authorities replied by letter dated 23 February 2004. A further request for information on this subject was sent to the Greek authorities on 15 June 2004, and answers to that letter were received on 4 August 2004.

By decision of 16 March 2004, notified to Greece by letter dated 16 March 2004 (SG(2002) D/228848), the Commission initiated the procedure laid down in Article 88(2) of the Treaty. The case was registered under number C 11/04.

The Commission's decision to initiate the formal investigation procedure was also published in the Official Journal of the European Union (2). The Commission there invited interested parties to submit their comments. Greece sent comments to the Commission by letter dated 11 June 2004.

Within the time allowed by the notice announcing the initiation of the procedure the Commission received comments from two other interested parties. These comments were submitted to the Greek authorities for their observations. Greece's observations were received on 3 November 2004.

On 11 October 2004 the Commission sent a letter giving the Greek authorities formal notice that it intended to issue a suspension injunction if within ten days of receipt of the letter it did not receive satisfactory information demonstrating that Greece was no longer making aid payments to the beneficiaries. The Greek authorities were asked to submit their comments on the matter. The Greek authorities replied to this letter of formal notice on 28 October 2004. Greece argued that issuing an injunction at this stage would seriously jeopardise the intensive efforts Greece was making to find a solution, and would be disproportionate and unjustified.

Since the submission of those observations the representatives of the Greek authorities have at regular intervals kept the Commission services apprised of developments with regard to this point (at meetings dated 17 December 2004, 19 December 2004, 3 February 2005, 7 February 2005 and 28 April 2005, and by letters dated 22 February 2005 and 19 April 2005) and with regard to the ongoing restructuring and privatisation of Olympic Airlines and of Olympic Airways Services.

They have also provided the Commission departments with information on the following issues:

— Law 3259/2004, granting Olympic Airways temporary immunity against enforcement proceedings brought by creditors (e-mail dated 22 December 2004), and

— Law 3282/2004, whereby the State took over Olympic Airways' obligations towards financial institutions in respect of the financing and leasing arrangements for Olympic Airlines' Airbus A340-300 aircraft. (e-mails dated 22 December 2004 and 4 April 2005).

These additional clarifications will be taken into consideration in the present Decision where they are relevant to the subject matter and shed light on the questions the Commission raised when it initiated the procedure.

2. THE FACTS

2.1. PAST COMMISSION DECISIONS REGARDING OLYMPIC AIRWAYS AND ITS SUBSIDIARIES

The 1994 Decision

On 7 October 1994 the Commission adopted Decision 94/696/EC (3) (the 1994 Decision) declaring that aid granted or to be granted by Greece to Olympic Airways was compatible with the common market provided that Greece met a series of commitments listed in the Decision.

The 1998 Decision

Several of the conditions attached to the 1994 Decision were not observed, and on 30 April 1996 the Commission decided to reopen the procedure laid down in Article 88(2) of the Treaty and to initiate proceedings with regard to new and non-notified aid which had come to its attention (4).

On 14 August 1998, the Commission adopted Decision 1999/332/EC (5) (the 1998 Decision) declaring that certain aid granted or to be granted by Greece to Olympic Airways was compatible with the common market in the context of a restructuring plan covering the period 1998-2002. Once again the aid was authorised subject to a number of conditions.

(2) See footnote 1.

The 2000 Decision

In July 2000 Greece notified the Commission that it intended to use the remaining authorised aid for a series of loan guarantees, to be contracted before the end of 2000, for the purchase of new aircraft and for investment necessary for the relocation of Olympic Airways to Athens International Airport at Spata. By letter of 10 November 2000 (SG(2000) D/108307), the Commission informed the Greek authorities that it had decided to amend part of the 1998 Decision with regard to the aid measure concerning the loan guarantees.

The 2002 Decision

On 6 March 2002 the Commission decided to initiate the formal investigation procedure laid down in Article 88(2) of the Treaty. It expressed concern that the aid allowed by the 1994 and 1998 Decisions might have been misused, that the company's restructuring plan might not have been implemented, and that new illegal State aid might have been granted.

On 9 August 2002 the Commission sent the Greek authorities a further injunction requiring them to provide the information previously requested. In particular, it sought accounts and figures relating to the payment of operating costs by the State. The replies provided by Greece were insufficient.

On 11 December 2002 the Commission adopted a final negative decision concerning aid granted by Greece to Olympic Airways (Decision 2003/372/EC (6), 'the 2002 Decision'). The Commission found that aid previously granted by the State and authorised by the Commission was incompatible with the Treaty on account of the failure to comply with the relevant conditions, notably the failure correctly to implement the restructuring plan. In addition, the Commission found that Olympic Airways had received new aid that was illegal and incompatible with the common market, in that the Greek State had tolerated the non-payment or deferment of the payment dates of certain social security payments, value added tax on fuel and spare parts, rents payable to airports, airport charges, and a tax imposed on passengers departing from Greek airports known as spatosimo.

The Decision required Greece to take the necessary measures to recover from the beneficiary the aid of GRD 14 billion (EUR 41 million) referred to in Article 1 of the Decision, and the new aid referred to in Article 2; recovery was to be effected without delay and in accordance with the procedures of national law provided they allowed the immediate and effective execution of the Decision. The aid to be recovered was to include interest from the date on which it was at the disposal of the beneficiary until the date of its recovery.

Greece was to inform the Commission within a period of two months from the date of notification of the Decision of the measures it was taking to comply with it. The Decision was notified to the Greek authorities by letter dated 13 December 2002 (SG(02) D/233148), and was published in the Official Journal of the European Union on 28 May 2003.

Follow-up to the 2002 Decision

On 11 February 2003, following on from the 2002 Decision, the Greek Government informed the Commission that it had received independent advice that Olympic Airways had not received preferential treatment, and that therefore the Government would not implement the requirements of the Decision regarding the recovery of the sums that the Commission had judged incompatible.

On 24 February 2003 Olympic Airways brought an action challenging the Decision before the Court of First Instance (Case T-68/03). Greece did not ask to join the action, and did not bring a separate action challenging the Decision before the Court.

On 6 March 2003 the Commission informed the Greek Government that it was under an obligation to comply with the 2002 Decision. On 26 June 2003 the Greek Government replied, saying that it was examining the legal effects of the 2002 Decision and of the procedure the Commission had followed in adopting it. It also assured the Commission that it intended to carry out the recovery. It did not carry out the recovery, nor did it provide the Commission with a timetable for doing so. The Commission was accordingly obliged to bring an action before the Court of Justice for failure to comply with the Decision, which it did on 3 October 2003 (Case C-415/03).

The Court of Justice ruled in the case on 12 May 2005: it found in favour of the Commission (7). The Court (Second Chamber) declared that by failing to take within the prescribed period all the measures necessary for repayment of the aid found to be unlawful and incompatible with the common market — except that relating to the contributions to the national social security institution — Greece had failed to fulfil its obligations.

(7) Not yet reported in the ECR.
On 23 May 2005 the Commission wrote to the Greek authorities regarding the measures to be taken by Greece to ensure compliance with the judgment of the Court of Justice.

The Greek authorities replied by letter dated 2 June 2005, reiterating their willingness to cooperate fully with the Commission in the matter. That reply will be summarised below in so far as it relates to the matters raised when the procedure was initiated.

The aid found to be incompatible in the 2002 Decision has not yet been recovered. The Commission may bring an action under Article 228 of the EC Treaty for failure to comply with the judgment.

The present Decision, however, concerns only the decisions or measures taken by the Greek authorities for the benefit of Olympic Airways and its successors after the 2002 Decision was adopted.

The Commission decided to initiate the procedure laid down in Article 88(2) on a number of grounds:

3.1. THE COMPANY'S CONTINUED FAILURE TO PAY TAX AND SOCIAL SECURITY CONTRIBUTIONS

Olympic Airways has been loss-making since 2002. Its profitability continues to be negative. Its core business, rather than generating income, is reducing the overall value of the company year on year. It is difficult if not impossible to believe, therefore, that it has been able to continue in business only because it has not been paying its debts to the State. In the 2002 Decision this failure to collect debts was found to constitute illegal State aid.

The Commission took the view, therefore, that the State was de facto if not de jure Olympic Airways' principal creditor, and that if it were not for continued State intervention the company would long since have ceased operations.

3.2. THE STRUCTURAL REORGANISATION OF THE COMPANY

When it initiated the procedure the Commission was aware of the existence of Law 3185/2003, which provided that the flight divisions of the various companies within the old Olympic Airways group, namely Olympic Aviation and Macedonian Airlines ('Macedonian'), were to be hived off and regrouped into a single entity, the former Macedonian, now renamed 'Olympic Airlines'. The non-flight divisions were to stay within Olympic Airways, now renamed 'Olympic Air Services'. Law 3185/2003 provided that an identical procedure could be undertaken in respect of the ground handling and maintenance and engineering divisions, although to date this has not been done.

When it initiated the procedure the Commission took the view that Greece, having failed to privatise the Olympic Airways group as a whole, had decided to divide it into separate units that would be more attractive to potential investors, and to dissociate the units from Olympic Airways' liabilities.
And indeed what appears to have happened after the restructuring of the Olympic Airways group is that since December 2003 all flight activities have been concentrated in the new Olympic Airlines, and all other activities, principally ground handling and maintenance and engineering, remain with the old company, now called Olympic Air Services. Olympic Air Services also retains a number of majority shareholdings in other aviation-related companies in Greece providing such things as catering, information technology and fuel services.

The Privatisation Law specifies that the transfer of assets and liabilities and any other entitlements to the new company is exempt from any tax, levy or fee payable to the State, to any legal person governed by public law or to any other public body. Such transfers are also exempt from any charge, debt or claim on the part of third parties, whether natural or legal persons, with the exception of the obligations that are expressly mentioned in the conversion balance sheet. Additionally, Article 27 of Law 3185/2003 stipulates that in respect of debts that Olympic Airways contracted before the hive-off of the flight division the new company is exempted from the application of Articles 479 and 939 of the Civil Code (4) and Articles 537 and following of the Commercial Code. Following this measure, therefore, creditors will be able to bring claims only in respect of debts that are transferred to Olympic Airlines, and will not be able to bring claims against the new company in respect of debts remaining with Olympic Airways. Subsequently, on 15 October 2004, the Greek authorities enacted Law 3259/2004, which gave Olympic Airways temporary immunity against enforcement proceedings brought by creditors.

In application of Law 3185/2003, the Greek State engaged consultants Deloitte & Touche to determine the value of the flight divisions of the Olympic Airways group. The consultants were also asked to prepare a restructuring plan and to draw up a report on the state of Olympic Airways and Olympic Aviation with a view to determining the number and type of employees to be transferred to Olympic Airlines. Deloitte & Touche indicated that they had not carried out an audit and that they were working solely on the basis of information provided by Olympic Airways and Olympic Aviation management. Additionally, Deloitte & Touche did not include in their evaluation the aircraft owned by Olympic Airways and Olympic Aviation; the value of the aircraft was calculated by another external consultant, Airclaims Ltd, at a market price of EUR 120 million.

Public service obligations were transferred from Olympic Aviation to Olympic Airlines without a public tender. It appears that Olympic Aviation had secured the sum of EUR 10 million in debt to AIA airport on the earnings from these public service obligations, and that that loan remained with Olympic Aviation, notwithstanding the fact that the public service obligations were now to be performed by Olympic Airlines.

President Decree 178/2002, which transposes Council Directive 98/50/EC (4) into Greek law, stipulates that in the case of a transfer of an activity from one undertaking to another, by whatever method, employees connected with that activity are to be transferred to the new undertaking on the same terms and with the same rights as before. It was the intention of the Greek authorities, however, to change the status of the employees. For this to happen, Presidential Decree 178/2002 required that negotiations take place.

At the time of the hive-off there were almost 300 specific laws, collective agreements or other provisions applying to Olympic Airways staff as a whole. The Greek authorities therefore considered it important to modify the legislative framework and to renegotiate the collective agreements, especially as the group employed 6 171 persons in June 2003 (approximately 1 850 staff moved to Olympic Airlines), and personnel costs represented 38 % of total revenue, when the average for the industry was around 22–26 %. Consequently, Article 27 of Law 3185/2003 envisaged a number of changes. Law 2190/1994, which concerns the administrative recruitment procedure for companies in the public sector, would not apply to Olympic Airlines. Employees who were entitled to retire in 2003 or 2004 under the applicable collective agreements would have their rights respected.

In contrast to Olympic Airways, which had financed its operations exclusively from debt, it was intended that Olympic Airlines would use its own funds. Olympic Airlines began operations with little or no debt, and this was due in no small part to the choice of the items transferred to the new entity. As regards liabilities, when it began operations the new company inherited no financial debt from the parent company, which was indebted at that stage to the tune of EUR 207 million.

(4) Both articles refer to the rights of creditors to protection in the context of transfers of assets.

3.3. THE ‘ADVANCE’ OF EUR 130 312 450 TO OLYMPIC AIRWAYS

By Ministerial Decree 2/71992/A0024 of 22 December 2003, enacted pursuant to Article 27 of Law 3185/2003, the Greek State opened a special account at the Bank of Greece entitled ‘Greek State — Denationalisation account of the Olympic Airways group’. The account is to be credited with the proceeds of any sale, within the framework of the privatisation procedure, of companies within the Olympic Airways group whose shares have been transferred to the Greek State (the first being Olympic Airlines). Nevertheless, to cover expenditure necessary pending the privatisation of the companies within the group, the account was credited by the State with a sum described as an ‘advance’ (prokatavoli) or ‘prepayment’ (propilromi). This advance is equal to the nominal share capital of Olympic Airlines (EUR 130 312 450).

Those parts of Olympic Airways’ liabilities which were not transferred to the new Olympic Airlines, and specifically the expenditure connected with the early retirement of certain staff, were to be financed out of the special account and from revenue generated by the supply of services to Olympic Airlines and to third parties.

3.4. SPATOSIMO AND PAYMENTS TO AIA

By letter of 19 January 2004 a complainant, Aegean Airlines, forwarded to the Commission a copy of a letter from the Greek Civil Aviation Authority to the Auditor-General of the State, which had also been sent to the Athens International Airport company AIA (ref. DII/A/28751/11626 of 22 July 2003). It appeared from this letter that Olympic Airways owed the sum of EUR 26 001 473,33 in respect of the ‘tax for the modernisation and development of airports’, known as ‘spatosimo’, which was levied on passengers by air carriers and was to be forwarded by them to the State.

It also appeared that the Civil Aviation Authority was seeking payment of this EUR 26 million to it. It therefore appeared that Olympic Airways, the main user of Greek airports, did not pay spatosimo, thus obliging the State to find means to aid AIA, which was newly established and was dependant on spatosimo. Although Olympic Airways was under an obligation to repay the sums it owed at some time in the future, the Commission suspected that in the meantime it was benefiting as a result of the forbearance of the State, which did not penalise it for late payment, but in fact set up mechanisms whereby the other Greek airports had to contribute in order to compensate for the losses occasioned by the late payment or non-payment by Olympic Airways of the money it owed in spatosimo.

4. COMMENTS RECEIVED DURING THE PROCEDURE

4.1. THE GREEK AUTHORITIES’ INITIAL COMMENTS

On 11 June 2004 Greece submitted its response to the initiation of the procedure. It began by explaining that in its opinion the most appropriate solution for Olympic Airways was the privatisation of the various businesses and operations of the group. The privatisation would take place as quickly as practicable and in full compliance with all applicable rules and requirements of Greek and EC law; the Commission would be kept fully informed of developments. Greece explained that privatisation was the most economically advantageous solution for the authorities, as it would generate more money than could be expected if the company were to be liquidated. While acknowledging that the privatisation option would also have social and other non-economic benefits, the Greek authorities emphasised that the economic analysis was the only criterion for deciding on the most appropriate strategy.

Greece referred to the progress that had already been made in the privatisation process, which had been communicated to the Commission in advance. Greece confirmed that the flight operations of Olympic Airways and Olympic Aviation had been hived off into an existing company, Macedonian, along with a number of intangible assets, such as slots, rights under bilateral agreements, the brand name and logo, and Olympic Airways’ goodwill. Macedonian had changed its name and had become Olympic Airlines. Ownership of Olympic Airlines’ shares (following a capital increase to accommodate the contribution in kind of the flight operations) had been transferred directly to the Greek State, thus taking Olympic Airlines out of the Olympic Airways group. The new company had been granted all necessary licences and had begun operations on 12 December 2003.
The Greek authorities further explained that the strategic model for Olympic Airlines was the creation of a viable scheduled air carrier, operating with industry average labour costs, which would be able to take advantage of a number of factors including Olympic Airways’ strong brand image, Greece’s position as one of the world’s 15 favourite tourist destinations, and the 2004 Olympic Games in Athens. New management had been appointed to Olympic Airlines and a thorough review of the business plan was under way.

Following Olympic Airlines’ commencement of operations Olympic Airways had ceased to be an EU licensed air carrier and had been renamed Olympic Airways Services. Olympic Aviation had also ceased flight operations, with the exception of limited general aviation and helicopter services, which were expected to be transferred to the new company.

With respect to the non-flight operations now regrouped within Olympic Airways Services (ground handling, maintenance and engineering and aviation training), Greece indicated that it intended to privatise these activities also. This was provided for by Law 3185/2003. Any holdings in other companies, such as Olympic Catering and Galileo Hellas, were likewise to be sold. Olympic Airways also had interests in three fuel companies that operated at Athens International Airport, namely Athens Airport Pipeline, Olympic Fuel and Olympic IntoPlane, and it was anticipated that these shareholdings would be sold off in a timely and orderly manner. The sale of these companies would be relatively easy, as they had ‘clean balance sheets’ and their private shareholders had the right of first refusal to buy them.

The Greek authorities wanted to clarify a number of issues relating to the restructuring that had been raised when the procedure was initiated.

With regard to the agreements between Olympic Airways and Olympic Airlines, Greece asserted that all services were provided at market rates and were in accordance with Olympic Airways’ generally applicable commercial policy. The Greek authorities undertook to transmit these agreements to the Commission.

With regard to aircraft leases, Greece stressed that the only aircraft transferred to Olympic Airlines were those fully owned by Olympic Airways. Aircraft leased by Olympic Airways were subleased to Olympic Airlines at market rates, because if the leases had been terminated early Olympic Airways would have had to compensate the lessors for their losses. The operating leases would be assigned directly to Olympic Airlines, thus taking Olympic Airways out of the lease.

The leases of four Airbus A340-300 aircraft partially covered by State guarantees (up to 45 % of the financing value) would not be assigned to the new company. Olympic Airlines would operate these aircraft on a sublease basis, paying market rates to Olympic Airways. In this way the Greek authorities contended that no State benefit would pass to Olympic Airlines.

On the State guarantees for these aircraft, it was the contention of Greece that although the 2002 Decision declared that restructuring aid granted to Olympic Airways in several forms (including State guarantees) was incompatible, the Commission had ordered the recovery only of the last tranche of the restructuring aid granted, equal to EUR 41 million (as well as the recovery of unauthorised new aid), on the grounds of legitimate expectation. Greece maintained that as the 2002 Decision did not provide specifically for the recovery (or cancellation) of State guarantees, it allowed their continuation.

The Greek authorities argued that the transfer of public service obligations was lawful, because the operation of these routes formed an integral part of the flight activities of Olympic Aviation, and the routes continued to be operated with the same aircraft and same personnel as the rest of the network.

Regarding the alleged new aid to Olympic Airways, the Greek authorities expressed some confusion as to what was meant by ‘tax obligations’. The Greek authorities said that the Commission had failed to show that the Greek authorities had ‘assisted’ Olympic Airways by tolerating the non-payment of certain obligations (not only tax obligations). They argued that it was for the Commission to discharge the burden of proving such an allegation, which it had failed to do. The Greek authorities reiterated that Olympic Airways was subject to the generally applicable Greek law and procedures applicable to all Greek companies in this regard.
Concerning the alleged non-payment of the spatosimo tax, the Greek Government submitted that the relationship between the air carriers, who collected spatosimo, and the Civil Aviation Authority, to which they forwarded it, had to be distinguished from the relationship between the Authority and the airports in Greece (including AIA), which received funding from spatosimo calculated on the basis of the number of passengers flown. Air carriers collected spatosimo from passengers, and forwarded it to the State. Spatosimo levied but not paid to the State constituted a debt to the State and was subject to the general provision of the Code for the Collection of Debts owed to the State (KEDE). This was what had happened in the case of the sum of EUR 26 601 473,33 referred to, which Olympic Airways had not paid on time but had paid off subsequently, in instalments, with all the default interest and penalties applicable.

The collection mechanism was separate from the disbursement mechanism whereby the Greek State (through the Civil Aviation Authority) paid money to the airports. Although the two mechanisms were intended to operate back-to-back, one financing the other, the obligation on the Greek State to pay the airports was not dependant on its ability to collect the sums due from the air carriers. As a result there had been situations where the State had been obliged to grant sums that had not yet been collected. While this was unsatisfactory for the State, it did not amount to State aid, as the air carriers were not released from their obligation to pay (with default interest and penalties). In the particular case referred to when the procedure was initiated, cash flow constraints had obliged the Greek State to alter the percentages of spatosimo allocated to particular airports, granting more to AIA (which resulted in a short-term reduction in the payments due to other airports). This was essential, as AIA’s financial situation was monitored by the European Investment Bank and commercial lenders; the step was irrelevant to the question whether Olympic Airways paid its dues.

The Greek State said that this non-payment of the spatosimo tax was the only evidence cited by the Commission of the non-payment of Olympic Airways’ debts to the State.

With regard to the special account provided for by Law 3185/2003, the Greek authorities submitted that the advance to Olympic Airways of the sum of EUR 130 312 450 was a measure of a temporary nature, and was something that any prudent market investor would do. When the time came to sell Olympic Airlines, any sums advanced would be repaid to the special account. The Greek authorities further explained that the shares in Olympic Airlines no longer belonged to the Olympic Airways group but to the State. As Olympic Airways had been deprived of the value of its flight division, however, provision for an advance to Olympic Airways which did not exceed the value of its ‘lost’ property was a proportionate and adequate measure for the purposes of restructuring and privatisation.

In the event that revenue from the sale of Olympic Airlines was not enough to repay the advance of EUR 130 312 450, the shortfall would be made up from the sale of non-flight operations. Law 3185/2003 provided that the proceeds of the sale of these divisions were to be paid into the special account. In the event that the financial obligations of Olympic Airways exceeded the nominal value of the share capital of the companies to be sold, Greek insolvency law would apply, and creditors could make their respective claims accordingly.

Any sums from the proceeds of the sale which exceeded the nominal value of the share capital of the companies sold would remain with the State, and could not be used by Olympic Airways. Olympic Airways would have access to the account only in order to meet its severance and retirement obligations and to cover the financial obligations of Olympic Airways and Olympic Aviation during the course of the restructuring and liquidation process.

The Greek authorities submitted that Law 3185/2003 was an attempt to maximise shareholder value so as to maximise the recovery of the aid and the return on investment. Creditors would not be better protected by a bankruptcy.

In the alternative, if the Commission were to take the view that the advance was not consistent with what a private market economy investor would have done to maximise recovery and return on investment, the Greek authorities asked the Commission to consider whether in the light of the rescue and restructuring guidelines the advance constituted rescue aid compatible with the common market under Article 87(3)(c). In that event the Greek authorities would submit that the conditions for the grant of rescue aid were met from December 2003 onward, and this would be substantiated by providing business plans and the like.

On the question of possible aid to the future purchasers of any of the Olympic companies, the Greek authorities wanted to reassure the Commission that they intended to sell Olympic Airlines and any other divisions or businesses at market prices, and in accordance with the applicable Greek and Community law.
The Greek authorities disagreed with the conclusion that in prohibiting any creditors of Olympic Airways from bringing actions against Olympic Airlines the Greek State was seeking to protect Olympic Airlines from the enforcement of the 2002 Decision. They contended that this was not the intention, which was rather to maximise recovery of investment. They explained that the operation of the special account was such as to ensure that amounts up to the nominal value of the shareholding of Olympic Airways were available to Olympic Airways and its creditors, which ensured an adequate level of creditor protection. Greece emphasised that it was entitled to decide upon the most appropriate means of restructuring and privatisation, and that it was a legitimate step on its part to introduce a safeguard to ensure that Olympic Airways' creditors had at least the same level of protection as they would otherwise have had. This protection of creditors should not be confused with the obligation to recover imposed by the 2002 Decision.

Greece also disagreed with the Commission’s conclusion that the creation of Olympic Airlines was not a solution, as Olympic Airlines’ viability was not guaranteed: Greece stated that it was confident that Olympic Airlines would be successful.

With respect to the proposed long implementation period for the overall restructuring and privatisation, Greece said that it noted the Commission’s concerns, and would try to accelerate the process where practicable. Greece intended to provide the Commission with a new timetable for the implementation of the restructuring and privatisation plan and the subsequent liquidation of Olympic Airways.

On the question of other laws providing Olympic Airways with special exemptions or immunities, Greece reiterated that the provisions of Law 96/1975 granting special privileges to Olympic Airways (in the areas of payment of duties on transactions and exemption from payment of stamp and traffic duties and with regard to State guarantees) had been repealed, and that Olympic Airways was subject to all generally applicable taxes and duties and operated in the context of a free market economy.

4.2. COMMENTS SUBMITTED BY THIRD PARTIES

Following the publication in the Official Journal of the European Union of the letter addressed to the Greek authorities, comments were received within the time allowed from two other interested parties.

4.2.1. AEGEAN AIRLINES

The first set of comments was submitted by a Greek air carrier, Aegean Airlines (‘Aegean’). Aegean made the following observations.

Aegean alleged that during the first year of operations at AIA, Olympic Airways had paid less than 30 % of its debts to AIA, that agreements had been reached between AIA and Olympic Airways (which was AIA’s largest individual customer, at 35 %), and that two preferred mortgages in favour of AIA had been registered on three Olympic Airways aircraft to secure payment of sums in excess of EUR 29 million plus interest and expenses. Olympic Airways’ overdue liability to AIA was estimated by Aegean to be of the order of EUR 70–80 million. Aegean alleged that AIA, which was 53 % State-controlled, had allowed Olympic Airways and Olympic Airlines to incur substantial liabilities, and that similar facilities were not available to other airlines. Aegean estimated that if it had been afforded the same facilities it could have had working capital of EUR 40–50 million at its disposal.

The financial performance of companies within the Olympic Airways group

Aegean stated that Olympic Aviation had recorded losses of EUR 32.2 million, corresponding to 39 % of its revenues of EUR 83 million, despite having received EUR 8.2 million in compensation from the Greek State for ‘early relocation’ of its activities from Ellinikon airport to AIA. Olympic Aviation’s debts to Olympic Airways had grown from EUR 68 million in 2000 to EUR 127 million at the end of 2002. Olympic Airways had not consolidated Olympic Aviation’s accounts in 2001 and 2002, and in Aegean’s view this was to make the parent company’s books look better.

Aegean also advanced some indications of Olympic Airways’ profitability in 2003. According to publicly available traffic information, Olympic Airways’ traffic had declined by 8 % in 2003, while its load factor had declined by 5 %. The decline was most pronounced on its European network, where there had been a fall of 14.4 %; the number of business passengers had fallen by 26 %. In Aegean’s opinion this decline in passenger numbers together with an increasingly difficult market (fuel price increases, increased competition from low-cost carriers) meant that the Olympic Airways group’s financial position must have deteriorated through 2003.

Possible subsidisation of Olympic Airlines through non-payment of debts to Olympic Airways Services

Aegean voiced its suspicion that the new company was not paying for the services that it received from Olympic Airways Services, or at least was not paying what it ought to pay.
According to Aegean the advance of EUR 130 312 450 million lodged to the special account had been exhausted after eight months.

A new law had been adopted (Law 3259/2004) protecting Olympic Airways Services and Olympic Aviation from having enforcement proceedings brought against them. Under this law no enforcement or interim relief proceedings could be brought inside or outside Greece in respect of the movable or immovable assets of Olympic Airways Services or Olympic Aviation before 28 February 2005. The law seemed to have been adopted because certain creditors had seized an Airbus 300-600 aircraft and were threatening to sell it to settle their claims.

Aegean complained that the Greek State had awarded Olympic Aviation's public service obligation routes to Olympic Airlines automatically, without a public tender. In addition, all of Olympic Airways' rights in respect of traffic to non-EEA States had been taken over by the new company without any reassessment of the criteria for designation, although other airlines, including Aegean, had expressed an interest in being designated.

According to press reports Macedonian had accumulated tax liabilities of GRD 3.5 billion before it was converted into Olympic Airlines; Aegean alleged that the Greek State had not made any claim against Olympic Airlines in respect of this sum.

4.2.2. RYANAIR

Comments were also received from the Irish low-cost airline Ryanair. Ryanair made a number of general observations regarding the application of Community State aid rules in Member States other than Greece and in relation to airlines other than Olympic. With regard to the case in hand, Ryanair noted at the outset that it was unable to comment on the letter sent to the Greek Government, because no English translation had been provided.

Ryanair went on to say that in the original investigation against Olympic Airways the amount of State aid found to have been received by Olympic Airways was over EUR 1 billion, and yet Olympic Airways had been required to repay only EUR 200 million to the Greek State. Other airlines had been forced to subsidise the failing national carrier through higher airport charges because Olympic Airways had been granted a 'holiday' from these charges. In Ryanair's opinion the continued illegal support given to this failed national airline seriously undermined the potential for new and more efficient operators to enter the market. The creation of a new, debt-free airline was unacceptable: Ryanair wondered whether the procedures in force under Article 4 of Council Regulation (EEC) No 2407/92 of 23 July 1992 on licensing of air carriers had been followed with regard to the application for an operating licence for the new company. In conclusion, Ryanair stated that the Greece should not be permitted to circumvent the rules once again and to continue to prop up its failed national airline.

4.3. GREECE'S REPLY TO THIRD-PARTY COMMENTS

Greece took the view that the information contained in the comments submitted by third parties was inaccurate and contributed nothing new to the investigation. The Greek authorities repeated that the previous privatisation process for the airline had been terminated on 6 October 2004, and that a new group of advisers had been appointed for the privatisation of both Olympic Airlines and the other businesses or divisions. The new group of advisers had already commenced work, and progress was being made on the 'proposal phase'. An indicative timetable for the privatisation had also been drawn up.

On the specific comments made by the third parties, Greece replied as follows.

4.3.1. AEGEAN AIRLINES' COMMENTS

The issue of the alleged preferential treatment of Olympic Airways at AIA had been addressed before in the context of the present State aid investigation, before the Court of Justice (Case C-415/03 Commission v Greece), and in other State aid investigations (Case NN 27/1996 Construction and exploitation of Athens International Airport). Although AIA was 55 % State-owned, it was operated as a private business independent of State control in its day-to-day operations. It therefore had sole responsibility for the collection of airport charges and for the settlement arrangements for late payment. Of the nine directors of AIA, four were appointed by the State and four by the developers, and the remaining one was an independent. Greece reiterated that it had already clarified the issues relating to late payment of spatosimo.

As regards the possible subsidisation of Olympic Airlines through non-payment of debts to Olympic Airways Services, the Greek authorities stated that all services provided by Olympic Airways Services to Olympic Airlines were provided on market terms and conditions. The Greek authorities provided some documentary evidence of payments made by Olympic Airlines to Olympic Airways.

More generally, Greece provided documentation in support of its assertion that Olympic Airlines had no payments outstanding with any State entity. It supplied evidence of up-to-date payments to the tax authorities in respect of salaried persons tax (FMY), VAT, airport charges (at AIA and elsewhere), spatosimo and social security contributions (IKA).

Greece stated that the sums in the special account were being used in accordance with Law 3185/2003. The advance paid into the account was a measure of a temporary nature that any prudent market investor would have taken. The advance had been used primarily for salaries in both Olympic Airways and Olympic Aviation, aircraft leasing costs, and early retirement of Olympic Airways and Olympic Aviation staff.

Olympic Airlines had received no funds from the special account, either directly or indirectly. The Greek authorities also strenuously denied the allegation that when it was established Olympic Airlines had not inherited any liabilities.

The sum of EUR 130,312,450 had been granted in instalments between 24 December 2003 and 13 May 2004 (a period of less than six months). It was paid out in this way so that if the Commission were to decide that it constituted State aid within the meaning of Article 87(1) of the Treaty, the conditions it needed to meet in order to qualify as rescue aid would all be met. In support of its contention that the advance would qualify as rescue aid, Greece drew attention to the following:

— Olympic Airways was a company in difficulty within the meaning of the rescue and restructuring guidelines;

— the advance to Olympic Airways constituted liquidity support;

— the sums advanced in liquidity support were expected to be reimbursed over a period of not more than 12 months after disbursement of the last instalment to Olympic Airways; the last instalment was paid in May 2004, and the reimbursement was to be carried out after privatisation of Olympic Airlines in May 2005;

— the grant of rescue aid avoided serious and severe social difficulties throughout Greece;

— Olympic Airways would cease to be an air carrier, and would operate non-flight services only, so that the adverse effects in other Member States would be limited;

— the amount of the advance was necessary to keep the company in business for the limited period for which it was granted; the amount was proportionate and was comparable to the amounts of rescue aid authorised by the Commission for other undertakings of similar size or undertakings operating in the same industry.

In Greece's opinion the new law protecting Olympic Airways Services and Olympic Aviation from enforcement proceedings (Law 3259/2004) was necessary to ensure the privatisation process. This temporary measure did not deprive creditors of their rights, but suspended enforcement proceedings for a limited period. The temporary protection from creditors that it provided did not apply against the Greek State or other public bodies, and applied only to Olympic Airways and Olympic Aviation. The measure did not constitute State aid, as it involved no transfer of State resources. (Under Law 3185/2003, following the hive-off creditors would be able to bring proceedings against Olympic Airlines only in respect of debts transferred to Olympic Airlines.)

Public service obligations and designations under bilateral agreements

Greece took the view that the transfer to Olympic Airlines of public service obligations and bilateral designation rights had taken place by virtue of rights of succession in accordance with Greek corporate law. The routes in question had been operated either by Olympic Airways or by Olympic Aviation, and the flight divisions of these companies had been transferred to Olympic Airlines.

With reference to the allegation that Macedonian had an outstanding tax bill of GRD 3.5 billion, Greece explained that an outstanding tax bill relating to the period 1993-1997 was the subject of litigation in the courts. Including charges and penalties, the amount at issue was EUR 9,106,481.75; the case was still ongoing. Pending the outcome of the proceedings the company had made appropriate provision for the liability in its accounts.
4.3.2 RYANAIR’S COMMENTS

(98) Greece rejected Ryanair’s comments completely; it said that Ryanair was not active on the Greek market, did not compete with Olympic Airlines, and was using the proceedings to advance arguments relating to its own ongoing debate with the Commission.

4.4. COMMENTS SUBMITTED BY GREECE FOLLOWING RECEIPT OF THE LETTER GIVING FORMAL NOTICE OF A SUSPENSION INJUNCTION

(99) On 11 October 2004 the Commission sent a letter giving Greece formal notice that it proposed to issue a suspension injunction requiring Greece to suspend any illegal aid until a decision could be taken on its compatibility. The letter informed Greece that it intended to adopt such an injunction if within ten days of the date of receipt of the letter it did not receive satisfactory information demonstrating that Greece was no longer making aid payments to the beneficiaries. Greece was asked to submit its comments on the matter.

(100) The Greek authorities replied to this letter of formal notice on 28 October 2004. Greece argued that issuing an injunction at this stage would be disproportionate and unjustified, and would seriously jeopardise the intensive efforts Greece was making to find a solution to the companies’ difficulties. With regard to the substantive issues raised in the Commission’s letter, they said that as Olympic Airways was no longer an air carrier it no longer collected the spatosimo tax. On the ‘special account’, and the payment of EUR 130 312 450 to Olympic Airlines from that account, they said this was the act of a prudent investor, or possibly a payment of rescue aid. They could not see the need for a suspension injunction at this stage of the investigation: there had been no significant change in the circumstances since the procedure had been initiated, and there was no evidence of substantial and irreparable damage that might warrant the adoption of such an injunction.

4.5. COMMENTS SUBMITTED BY GREECE FOLLOWING THE JUDGMENT IN CASE C-415/03 COMMISSION V GREECE

(101) As previously mentioned, the Commission wrote to the Greek authorities on 23 May 2005 seeking information on the measures to be taken by Greece to comply with the judgment of the Court of Justice in Case C-415/03 Commission v Greece.

(102) The Greek authorities replied by letter dated 2 June 2005; that letter was concerned primarily with the issue of recovery following the 2002 Decision, but it will be considered here in so far as touches on questions relating to the restructuring and proposed privatisation that form the subject matter of the current investigation.

(103) In the first place, the Greek authorities wanted to raise certain issues relating to the recovery of aid from Olympic Airways. The Greek authorities said that according to paragraph 33 of the Court judgment the operation in issue transferred all the assets of the company Olympic Airways … to the new company Olympic Airlines’, but that that was not correct, and that several important assets remained with Olympic Airways, which continued to be active in several markets.

(104) The companies within the Olympic Airways group were in the process of being privatised, and details of this privatisation had already been given to the Commission departments. The Greek authorities intended to comply fully with the recovery requirement, and when the assets of Olympic Airlines had been sold the proceeds would go directly to the Greek State. If those proceeds were not enough to cover the sums that had to be recovered, use would be made of the proceeds of the sale of Olympic Airways group companies lodged in the special account in the name of the Greek State. Once all these avenues had been exhausted it was the intention of the Greek authorities to liquidate Olympic Airways.

(105) In the event that the sales from Olympic Airlines were not sufficient to meet the recovery requirement, Greece undertook that no general or special provision of Greek law would protect the ‘successor companies’ (expressly including Olympic Airlines) from the obligation to reimburse the aid as required by the 2002 Decision. More specifically, regarding the special provision of Law 3185/2003 which granted protection from creditors to Olympic Airlines in respect of debts incurred by Olympic Airways before the restructuring, the letter continued ‘not even the Greek State can bring a claim against Olympic Airlines for debts of Olympic Airways’, and repeated Greece’s view that the primacy of Community law meant that in respect of recovery this provision could not frustrate the application of the Commission Decision and of the Community rules on State aid.

(106) The Greek authorities said that the purpose of the provision was to protect Olympic Airlines during the restructuring process, rather than to protect it from a possible obligation to recover the aid in accordance with the 2002 Decision. In the event that full recovery could not be made at the level of the Olympic Airways group, a potential future liability for recovery resting with Olympic Airlines would in Greece’s opinion not be possible if the successor company was sold at a reasonable market price in the light of the Commission guidelines on privatisation.
5. RESULTS OF THE EXPERT STUDY REQUESTED BY THE COMMISSION

(107) Before the Commission could assess the points raised when the procedure was initiated, and the information supplied by the Greek authorities and the third parties, it considered it necessary to review the current economic and financial situation of Olympic Airways (Olympic Airways Services) and Olympic Airlines, and the progress that had been made with restructuring and privatisation.

(108) To this end the Commission engaged the services of independent experts, Moore Stephens, to carry out a study of the restructuring, operations and privatisation to date of the various companies in the Olympic Airways group and to submit its findings on what had happened since the restructuring.

(109) Moore Stephens ('the experts') carried out their study in Athens between 9 and 26 May 2005. They were facilitated by the Greek authorities and their advisers, and also by the fact that a data room had been prepared by the authorities and their privatisation advisers so that potential purchasers involved in the privatisation process could carry out their own research.

5.1. EXPERT CONCLUSIONS RELATIVE TO THE RESTRUCTURING

(110) The experts examined the restructuring operation and the way in which the assets and liabilities to be transferred to Olympic Airlines and to remain with Olympic Airways had been evaluated; they indicated that certain entries were not in accordance with either Greek or international generally accepted accounting principles (GAAP). They indicated that a figure of EUR 30 million for goodwill had been recognised on Olympic Airways' balance sheet prior to the restructuring. This figure was a valuation, by management, of the Olympic brand name, the Olympic logo, the Olympic Airlines trademark, and slots and bilateral agreements. Neither Greek nor international GAAP allowed internally generated intangible fixed assets or goodwill to be recognised on the balance sheet.

(111) Another possible point of concern related to the valuation of aircraft. At the time of the hive-off, aircraft and aircraft engines owned by Olympic Airways and Olympic Aviation had been revalued at current market value. This exercise was carried out at 1 October 2003 by an international airline consultant, Airclaims Ltd, and resulted in an increase of approximately EUR 43.2 million over the existing written-down value.

(112) The experts pointed out that the opening balance sheet for Olympic Airlines contained no allowance for doubtful debts against trade receivables. Whilst Olympic Airlines management was confident that all the balances transferred would be collected, the experts felt that it was unrealistic to assume zero bad debts. A further figure of EUR 825 020 labelled 'doubtful accounts receivable' was included in Macedonian's conversion balance sheet. The experts were of the opinion that it was imprudent to include this as an asset.

(113) Olympic Airlines' opening balance sheet contained an asset of EUR 7.9 million from Olympic Airways, estimated by management, which had previously been a debt owed to Macedonian. The corresponding liability had not been transferred to Olympic Airlines because of the provisions of Law 3185/2003 that allowed liabilities to be retained by Olympic Airways.

(114) The opening balance sheet indicated a sundry debtor item of EUR 24.4 million, which related to a sum due from Olympic Airways in respect of the expected net proceeds of the sale of two A300-600 aircraft owned by Olympic Airways which remained on its balance sheet and which were leased to Olympic Airlines. The inclusion of this item was not in accordance with Greek or international GAAP, as it related to a sale that had not yet occurred of a fixed asset not owned by the company. As Olympic Airlines appeared to have borne the costs and enjoyed the benefits of these aircraft, the aircraft might have been transferred to Olympic Airlines with the other owned aircraft at their book value of EUR 19.2 million.

(115) The experts confirmed that the Olympic Airlines balance sheet excluded most of the flight operations liabilities of Olympic Airways and Olympic Aviation. Under Greek company law, when activities were hived off as part of a company restructuring all the related assets and liabilities had to be transferred. Whilst there was an inevitable degree of subjectivity in such an exercise, the legislation did not give management the option to be selective in the assets and liabilities transferred. Law 3185/2003, however, contained provisions that permitted the Olympic Airways group management to override the normal requirements of the legislation and selectively to exclude liabilities from the hive-off. Management had taken advantage of Law 3185/2003 to exclude from the hive-off all liabilities over one month old.
The experts carried out a comparison between the liabilities transferred and those left behind by comparing extracts from the opening balance sheet of Olympic Airlines at 11 December 2003 with the year-end balance sheets of Olympic Airways and Olympic Aviation at 31 December 2003 (Olympic Airways and Olympic Aviation did not prepare balance sheets at 11 December 2003).

Note 2: ABN Amro loan.
The experts showed that no long-term liabilities and less than 10% of the short-term liabilities had been transferred to Olympic Airlines. The total liabilities transferred to Olympic Airlines (EUR 145 million) were just 9.9% of the total liabilities of the three companies (EUR 1 471 million). The short-term liabilities transferred to Olympic Airlines (10% of total short-term liabilities) were those less than one month old.

The largest liabilities left behind with the Olympic Airways group were tax and social security liabilities to the State amounting to EUR 521 million. The experts reported that in leaving most of the liabilities behind in the Olympic Airways group, Olympic Airlines management’s stated intention was to enable the airline, in its new guise as Olympic Airlines, to continue trading and to proceed to privatisation. They concluded that if the Olympic Airways group management had transferred the full liabilities of the flight divisions to Olympic Airlines, the new company would have faced the same liquidity problems as the Olympic Airways group, which would almost certainly have led to the insolvency and closure of the airline. To put it another way, the restructuring exercise would have served no purpose if the full liabilities of the flight divisions of the Olympic Airways group had been transferred with the assets.

In the case of Macedonian, a tax provision amounting to EUR 9.1 million, relating to the findings of a tax audit covering the years 1992–1997, had been excluded from the balance sheet. No tax provision had been made for Macedonian for the years 1998–2003. A tax department audit had not yet been carried out. Management had not made any provision because they believed there would be no tax liability on profits for the period. Macedonian had made a profit in 2001, 2002 and 2003.

The experts concluded that the assets transferred to Olympic Airlines had been overvalued. They carried out their own valuation of the assets transferred, and concluded that the figure arrived at by the management of the Olympic Airways group (EUR 130 312 459), which had not been validated by an independent auditor, was significantly overvalued, in their opinion by more than EUR 90 million. Using accounting techniques recognised under Greek and international GAAP the experts restated Olympic Airlines’ balance sheet to reflect the issues described above, to the extent that they could be quantified: the result was that the value of the net assets transferred to Olympic Airlines was reduced from EUR 130 million to EUR 38 million. Even allowing for a certain level of subjectivity in the valuation, they said, it was difficult to explain the discrepancy between the two figures; they concluded that Olympic Airlines was overvalued (11).

(11) The experts observed that this exercise was not an audit of the opening balance sheet, and that the adjustments made did not necessarily include all those that would be required if an audit were to be carried out.
The experts could not say whether Deloitte and Touche had indeed drawn up the balance sheets, or whether they had been drawn up by management. Deloitte and Touche's report on their work was a descriptive report explaining the make-up of the balance sheets, in which they emphasised that 'no audit or other independent examination was carried out by ourselves' and that the conversion balance sheets remained 'the full, absolute and exclusive responsibility' of management.

The experts concluded that in addition to the questions of proper accounting treatment set out in the previous finding, there was an overall lack of assurance over the opening balance sheet figures, because of the absence of an audit or other independent control over the exercise. In support of this conclusion, the experts also referred to the auditors' report on the financial statements of Olympic Airways for the year ending on 31 December 2003, two and a half weeks after the opening balance sheet, where the auditors expressed reservations in respect of the company's opening balances. The auditors stated that they were not in a position to confirm the value of goodwill, fixed assets at valuation and the debtors and creditors transferred from the component companies to Olympic Airlines, and therefore did not express an opinion on them.

Law 3185/2003 provided for a cash advance from the Greek State to cover the financial obligations of Olympic Airways and Olympic Aviation in the course of the conversion and liquidation procedure; this sum was based on the nominal value of the shares of Olympic Airways. The experts concluded that it was in the interests of the Olympic Airways group [...] (*) to maximise Olympic Airways' opening share capital by maximising the value of transferred assets and minimising the value of transferred liabilities. The value of the net assets transferred and, in turn, the nominal value of the share capital of Olympic Airlines was EUR 130 million. The Greek Government had paid this sum to Olympic Airways in accordance with Law 3185/2003.

The experts concluded that if recognised accounting practices had been applied, Law 3185/2003 would have permitted the Greek Government to make only a much smaller contribution to Olympic Airways. Considering the cash position of Olympic Airways and Olympic Airlines at the time of the restructuring, such a reduction in the cash available from the Government would have had significant implications for the ability of Olympic Airways and Olympic Airlines to continue trading.

They further concluded that the final outcome of the hive-off, privatisation and asset sale process was that the Olympic Airways group would be left with no trading activities, with minimal assets and with debts amounting to hundreds of millions of euro. The insolvency rules in Greek law were likely to be applied to Olympic Airways and Olympic Aviation, which would be placed in liquidation. The costs would be borne by the creditors, principally the Greek State.

5.2. EXPERTS’ CONCLUSION ON OLYMPIC AIRWAYS (OLYMPIC AIRWAYS SERVICES) AFTER RESTRUCTURING

The experts examined the situation of Olympic Airways (Olympic Airways Services) following on from the Decision of 11 December 2003. The company had continued to make losses, which had eaten away at its capital and reserves and had severely hampered its borrowing possibilities.

5.2.1. OLYMPIC AIRWAYS' (OLYMPIC AIRWAYS SERVICES) TAX AND SOCIAL SECURITY SITUATION

The experts found that Olympic Airways' balance sheet contained large tax and social security liabilities. These had been increasing year on year, as payments to the tax authorities had not matched annual liabilities. The tax liability related mainly to employee payroll tax dating back several years and also included airport tax, VAT and profits tax liabilities. Under the hive-off of flight operations to Olympic Airlines, only one month's tax and social security liabilities had been transferred to the newly created entity. The social security liability related primarily to the company's main pension fund. In 2003 and 2004 the liability had increased by a total of EUR 137 million. In this period the company made payments of EUR 7.7 million under an agreement to settle debts for years prior to 2003.

(*) Figures from audited financial statements (qualified).
() Draft, unaudited figures from Olympic Airways accounting records.

Note:
Figures for 2005 are not available, as Olympic Airways' accounting records have not been updated beyond 31 December 2004.

The experts noted that the Olympic Airways audit report for 2003 stated that the company's books and records had to a great extent failed to comply with the provisions of tax legislation. The audit report also stated that the tax audit for the years 1998 and 1999 had concluded that the books and records were inadequate, and that since the company had not been audited by the tax authorities for the years 2000 to 2003 inclusive, its tax obligations for the years 1998 to 2003, inclusive, were not final.

The experts concluded that Olympic Airways had a history, going back several years, of not paying its taxation and social security liabilities in full. At the end of 2002 the total liability was already large, at EUR 273 million, and it had continued to grow significantly over the period since then. The estimated liability at the end of 2004, at EUR 627 million, was over 75% of the combined annual turnover of Olympic Airlines and the Olympic Airways group for 2003. They added that the underpayment of tax liabilities by Olympic Airways had provided a cash flow benefit to Olympic Airways both before and after restructuring.

5.2.2. THE EUR 130 312 459 TRANSFERRED TO OLYMPIC AIRWAYS (OLYMPIC AIRWAYS SERVICES)

The Greek Government made cash transfers totalling EUR 130 312 459 to the Olympic Airways group in seven instalments between 24 December 2003 and 13 May 2004. These were examined by the experts to see how they were paid and what they were subsequently used for.

Using this payment schedule and information provided by Olympic Airways, management [...]. The experts ascertained that Olympic Airways management appeared to have interpreted the concept of retirement and other restructuring expenses in the broadest possible sense, so as to cover any kind of spending by Olympic Airways in the period between the hive-off of Olympic Airlines and the completion of privatisation. It was not easy to verify the analysis of the purposes for which Olympic Airways had used the money, because the funds from the special account were not differentiated from any other funds received into the company's main bank account, but Olympic Airways management indicated to the experts that the funds had been spent as follows:

5.2.3. REPAYMENT BY GREEK STATE OF PART OF ABN AMRO BANK LOAN TO OLYMPIC AIRWAYS

On 9 February 2001, Olympic Airways entered into a loan agreement with ABN Amro Bank for a loan of EUR 182,198,160 to finance the relocation of Olympic Airways to the new Athens International Airport.

The loan was repayable in 16 six-monthly instalments of EUR 11,387,385 each, plus interest, between 9 August 2003 and 9 February 2011, and was backed by a State guarantee that entitled ABN Amro to demand fulfilment of Olympic Airways’ payment obligations directly from the State.

Under the terms of the hive-off of flight operations to Olympic Airlines on 11 December 2003, the loan remained as a liability in Olympic Airways’ accounts. By 31 December 2003, Olympic Airways had paid one scheduled instalment of the loan, and the liability in Olympic Airways’ balance sheet was EUR 170,810,775.

In their review of Olympic Airways’ accounting records the experts found that ABN Amro had invoked the Government’s guarantee in respect of the second, third and fourth instalments of the loan. As a consequence the Greek State had paid the following instalments on behalf of Olympic Airways:

5.2.4. FINANCE LEASING OF AIRCRAFT (A340s)

In their review of Olympic Airways’ accounts the experts found that on 24 September 2004 the Greek State had made lease payments totalling EUR 11,774,684 as guarantor under two finance lease agreements with Crédit Lyonnais for two A340 aircraft. The payments related to the six-monthly instalment due on 29 July 2004 under the lease contracts for the aircraft.

The experts found that the Government had asked the Greek tax authorities to recover the money from Olympic Airways. The tax authorities had submitted debit notes to Olympic Airways requesting payment. The amount was recorded in Olympic Airways’ books as a liability to the tax authorities, but had not yet been repaid.

5.2.5. DIRECT CASH FUNDING OF OLYMPIC AIRWAYS BY THE STATE

The experts also found that on 9 August 2004 the Greek State had made a cash payment of EUR 8.2 million to Olympic Airways. This sum had been paid by the State as an advance to Olympic Airways against money that Olympic Airways had paid into an escrow account, as a guarantee for finance lease payments to Crédit Lyonnais for two A340 aircraft. Crédit Lyonnais had agreed to allow the money to be released from the escrow account upon completion of the transfer of the aircraft lease contracts from Olympic Airways to the State (by novation), which was due to happen in December 2004. The transfer of the contracts to the State was indeed completed in December 2004.

When Olympic Airways had recovered the money from the escrow account in December 2004, it had not repaid the advance from the State. On 23 March 2005 the State wrote to Olympic Airways requesting repayment of the amount, plus interest. At the date of their final report to the Commission, on 14 June 2005, the experts confirmed that Olympic Airways had not repaid the amount to the State.

5.2.6. OTHER EXPENSES

In their review of Olympic Airways’ books, the experts found that the creditor balances at 31 December 2004 showed a sum of EUR 8 million owing to the State-owned Greek Telecommunications Organisation (OTE). Olympic Airways’ general ledger showed that Olympic Airways had not paid OTE for services at some locations in 2003 and 2004. Of the balance, EUR 4.5 million related to periods before 2003.
5.3. EXPERTS’ CONCLUSIONS ON OLYMPIC AIRLINES AFTER RESTRUCTURING

5.3.1. OLYMPIC AIRLINES’ RESULTS IN 2004

The experts pointed out that Olympic Airlines had experienced a difficult trading year in 2004, resulting in an operating loss of EUR 94.5 million on turnover of EUR 616.7 million, and a net loss for the year, before tax, of EUR 87.1 million. Even in terms of gross operating profit (turnover less direct costs of services) the company had achieved a profit of just EUR 4 million. The 2003 profit-and-loss figures included a provision of EUR 13 million as an extraordinary item, of which EUR 12.6 million had been released back to income in 2004. It was therefore more appropriate to view the loss for 2004 as EUR 99.7 million, rather than EUR 87.1 million.

The experts concluded that Olympic Airlines’ business was heavily cyclical, as evidenced by the negative cash flow in the months of October to March, which was compensated for by positive cash flow in the months of April to September. This cycle repeated itself each year. The net inflows in the summer months did not compensate for the net outflows in the winter months, so that overall there was an ongoing need for additional facilities. It was not clear when the company would become cash-flow positive year on year, but management hoped that under new ownership this would happen in 2006 at the earliest or 2007 at the latest.

5.3.2. TAX (INCOME TAX, CORPORATION TAX, SOCIAL SECURITY AND VAT)

The experts reviewed the accounts, books and records of Olympic Airlines in relation to employee income tax, social security contributions and VAT for the period from December 2003 to May 2003. They observed that under the terms of the hive-off of flight operation to Olympic Airlines, only one month’s tax and social security liabilities had been transferred to Olympic Airlines in respect of Olympic Airways staff transferred to the new company.
The total tax and social security bill owed by Olympic Airlines to the Greek State had increased by EUR 20.2 million between December 2003 and December 2004. This formed part of the EUR 94.4 million owed by Olympic Airlines.

Employee and employer social security contributions (IKA) were accounted for and paid to the State on time up to October 2004. Between October 2004 and February 2005, payments were not made. In March 2005, the company entered into a settlement agreement with the tax authorities to pay the outstanding debt of EUR [...] million in 18 monthly instalments starting in March 2005; this effectively converted the balance owed into an 18-month loan facility. Since March 2005 the company has complied with this arrangement and with its ongoing monthly obligations.

The experts found that Olympic Airlines had properly accounted for and paid VAT in the period.

The experts reported that Olympic Airlines had commenced operations with a fleet of 43 aircraft, 18 owned and 25 leased. Since that time the number of aircraft owned by Olympic Airlines had remained the same, and the number it leased had fallen by three. Two Airbus A300-600 aircraft owned by Olympic Airways and leased by Olympic Airlines had been sold in February 2005, and the lease of one Boeing 737-3000 had not been renewed when it expired in March 2005.

5.3.3.1. Operating leases

Olympic Airlines subleased aircraft from Olympic Airways, Olympic Aviation (Olympic Airways Services) and, in the case of four finance leases, direct from the Greek State (see Section 5.3.3.2). Eighteen aircraft were currently leased on operating leases, either direct from the lessors or subleased from Olympic Airways or Olympic Aviation (Olympic Airways Services). As the leases between the lessors and Olympic Airways and Olympic Aviation (Olympic Airways Services) expired, Olympic Airlines entered into new lease contracts directly with the lessors.

The experts found that where aircraft were subleased from Olympic Airways or Olympic Aviation (Olympic Airways Services), the sublease charges were lower than those due under the head lease. When they asked Olympic Airlines management why this was and how it could be justified, they were told that the subleases were at market rates. According to Olympic Airlines management, Olympic Airways (Olympic Airways Services) benefited from the arrangement because it had a lessee for its aircraft. Olympic Airlines stressed that it could source its leased aircraft from elsewhere if Olympic Airways did not offer market rates. Olympic Airlines benefited because it was able to lease the aircraft at what it considered to be current market rates rather than the higher rates that had obtained under the original contracts.

The experts carried out a comparison of the head-lease and sublease rates, and found that for the year to 31 December 2004 the total charges for subleases from Olympic Airways to Olympic Airlines amounted to EUR 29.7 million, whereas the total head-lease costs paid by Olympic Airways for the same aircraft over the same period amounted to EUR 67.3 million. The lease cost ultimately borne by Olympic Airways was EUR 37.6 million (55 % of the total lease cost).
5.3.3.2. Finance leases

(159) The experts reported that following the initial hive-off, four Airbus A340-300 aircraft, the lease for which had been guaranteed by Greece, had initially been subleased by Olympic Airways to Olympic Airlines. However, because of the perceived uncertainty over the future of Olympic Airways and Olympic Airlines at the time of the hive-off, the financial institutions involved (the lessors) had imposed more onerous payment and security conditions for the leases. In order to alleviate those conditions, both for Olympic Airways and for itself as guarantor, the Greek State decided to step into Olympic Airways’ shoes, and the head leases for all four aircraft were transferred from Olympic Airways to the State (by novation), two in December 2004 and two in April 2005. The experts observed that in order to be able to do this legally it was necessary for the Greek Parliament to pass new legislation (Article 53 of Law 3283/2004).

Note 1: Head lease payments are half-yearly in arrears.
Note 2: Sublease payments are monthly in advance.
Note 3: All payments shown in the table are on a monthly basis.
Note 4: Monthly head-lease payments are based on annual payments for 2004 divided by 12.

(160) The experts also carried out a comparison between the head-lease rates and the sublease rates in respect of these four aircraft. They found that the head-lease charges paid by the State amounted to approximately EUR 750 000 per month, whereas the sublease charges ranged from approximately EUR 400 000 to EUR 500 000 per month. In effect the Greek State lost between EUR 250 000 and EUR 350 000 on each of these four aircraft each month.

(161) The experts also indicated that between December 2004 and the end of March 2005, Olympic Airlines had made no payments to the State for the two A340s the State was subleasing to it. At the end of March 2005, Olympic Airlines’ liability to the Government in respect of these two subleases was EUR 5,1 million. Olympic Airlines paid this sum in April 2005, along with the lease cost for that month.

5.3.4. SPATOSIMO

(162) The experts reported that between December 2003, when Olympic Airlines commenced operations, and 31 December 2004, the airport tax collected by Olympic Airlines from its customers amounted to EUR […] million, and the amount paid to the tax authorities amounted to EUR […] million. In March 2004, and from June to September 2004, payments to the tax authorities had been made on time (by the 20th of the month following collection). For the other months between December 2003 and March 2005, payments had been made between one and five months late. The balance at 31 December 2004 was EUR […] million, which represented about three months’ collections. At March 2005, the amount of airport tax due was EUR […] million, which represented about two and a half months’ collections.
5.3.5. CHARGES PAID BY OLYMPIC AIRLINES TO OLYMPIC AIRWAYS SERVICES FOR GROUND HANDLING AND TECHNICAL SUPPORT

(163) As Olympic Airlines comprises only the flight divisions of Olympic Airways and Olympic Aviation, it is unable itself to carry out the ancillary functions essential for the running of an airline (line maintenance, refuelling, ground handling etc.), and has to pay to have these things done. The Commission asked the experts to verify the claim made by the Greek authorities that Olympic Airlines paid market prices for these services, and that the contracts had thus been concluded at arm’s length.

(164) The experts reported that a series of seven contracts had been concluded between Olympic Airlines and Olympic Airways Services (including Olympic Aviation and Olympic Catering) for a range of services including ground handling, technical maintenance, cargo and mail handling, storehouse management, accounting support and consulting, human resources training and general flight itinerary programming services, information technology and telecommunications services, and catering. The experts found that in 2004, companies within the Olympic Airways group had provided Olympic Airlines with services to a value of approximately EUR […] million. The main service contracts between Olympic Airlines and the Olympic Airways group were for ground handling and maintenance services. Olympic Airlines used the Olympic Airways group for […] % of its ground handling services and for all of its maintenance. The contracted fees for 2004, based on scheduled flight activity, were EUR […] million for ground handling and EUR […] million for maintenance.

(165) The Commission’s experts examined the rates charged by the Olympic Airways group to Olympic Airlines and to other airlines. The rates charged for ground handling services were lower, but this was attributed by Olympic Airlines management to commercial factors, as Olympic Airlines was the largest customer and received volume discounts. For the catering services it received Olympic Airlines appeared to pay market prices, and for technical maintenance services Olympic Airways charged Olympic Airlines on a basis different to the system it applied to other customers, making meaningful comparison impossible. Olympic Airlines management had stated that, in their view, the rates for all the services supplied by Olympic Airways had been negotiated at arm’s length and represented fair market value.

5.3.6. AIA CHARGES

(166) AIA is a 55 % State-owned company responsible for the construction, operation and development of Athens International Airport. Although majority State-owned, the company is run as a private-sector company under the Airport Development Agreement, and is not subject to the laws on Greek State-controlled entities.

(167) AIA was and is Olympic Airways/Olympic Airlines’ largest creditor, with annual charges of approximately EUR 60 million. As AIA costs form such an important component of Olympic Airlines’ cost base, it was necessary for the experts to examine the relationship between Olympic Airlines and AIA to determine whether the airline received favourable terms that might amount to indirect State support. The experts determined that Olympic Airlines’ liabilities and payments to AIA for the period since it began operations up to 19 May 2005 were as follows:

(168) The experts reported that AIA imposed charges on airlines for a range of services provided by the airport, including aircraft landing and parking fees, security, and ground handling infrastructure. The charges were levied at standard rates, which were detailed in a document published by AIA in June 2003 setting out guidelines for customers, terms and conditions of use, and a schedule of traffic charges. Standard payment terms were 20 calendar days. Late payment interest was payable at 3 % above Euribor.

(169) The experts learned that in late 2004 Olympic Airlines had entered into a financial settlement agreement with AIA under which Olympic Airlines was entitled to settle invoices from AIA within a period of 45 days instead of the 20 days applicable under AIA’s normal payment conditions. The extended payment terms applied from 1 July 2004 to 28 February 2005. As a condition for receiving these extended terms, Olympic Airlines was required to provide security in the form of a mortgage in favour of AIA on two […] aircraft, up to a maximum amount of EUR […] million. The liability at 31 December 2004 represented approximately four months’ charges, and in May 2005 it represented approximately five months’ charges, which is clearly in excess of the 45-day payment terms to be allowed under the financial settlement agreement.
On 22 April 2005, Olympic Airlines entered into a settlement agreement with AIA for the payment of EUR [...] million of the EUR [...] million debt outstanding at that date. This agreement provided for a further EUR [...] million in security. Under this agreement variable monthly payments were to be made between 30 April 2005 and 30 November 2005. Of the EUR [...] million, EUR [...] million would come from revenue from public service obligations. Security of EUR [...] million was provided in the form of preferred mortgages on two [...] aircraft and four engines.

On the basis of this information, the experts were of the opinion that allowing Olympic Airlines to build up debts of EUR [...] million over the winter season, and then to convert them into an 18-month short-term loan to be paid over the summer season, in practice amounted to providing Olympic Airlines with seasonal working capital financing. This financing, together with continued tolerance of late payments, suggested that Olympic Airlines was receiving treatment from AIA that would not be available to other airlines.

6. ASSESSMENT OF THE AID

6.1. LEGAL BASIS OF THE ASSESSMENT

Article 87(1) of the EC Treaty states that ‘any aid granted by a Member State or through State resources in any form whatsoever which distorts or threaten to distort competition by favouring certain undertakings or the production of certain goods shall, in so far as it affects trade between Member States, be incompatible with the common market’.

The concept of State aid encompasses any advantage, direct or indirect, which is financed out of State resources and is granted by the State itself or by any intermediary body acting by virtue of powers conferred on it.

The present Decision relates only to aid granted after the 2002 Decision. It is not concerned with any possible State aid element in any future transaction or transactions in respect of the shares or assets of any of the companies involved.

Article 228 of the EC Treaty provides that ‘If the Commission considers that the Member State concerned has not taken such measures it shall, after giving that State [by letter of formal notice] the opportunity to submit its observations, issue a reasoned opinion specifying the points on which the Member State concerned has not complied with the judgment of the Court of Justice’.

(i) What was the nature of the restructuring of the Olympic Airways group carried out in December 2003?

In its judgment in Case C-415/03 Commission v Greece, delivered on 12 May 2005, the Court of Justice found that the Member State had not taken the necessary measures.

The Commission has made an in-depth analysis of the comments received in the course of the procedure, the observations submitted by Greece, and the experts’ study of the restructuring of Olympic Airways and of the behaviour of Olympic Airways and Olympic Airlines since restructuring. The Commission has decided to consider the question whether State aid has been granted under four main headings: (i) the restructuring itself; (ii) whether any other State aid has been given to Olympic Airlines since 2003; (iii) the grant of EUR 130 million to Olympic Airways; and (iv) whether any other State aid has been given to Olympic Airways.

In drawing up and implementing Law 3185/2003 the intention of the Greek authorities seems to have been to enable the flight divisions of the Olympic Airways group, now absorbed into Olympic Airlines, to continue trading and to proceed to privatisation. The Commission must therefore examine the relationship between Olympic Airways and Olympic Airlines. Olympic Airlines was established out of the flight divisions of Olympic Airways and continues Olympic Airways’ core flight operations; it initially took over all of Olympic Airways’ aircraft, and currently operates 40 aircraft, compared to the 43 previously flown by Olympic Airways, with the same crews on the same routes. Olympic Airlines has succeeded to the route network, the public service obligation contracts and the rights under bilateral agreements with non-EU countries governing routes previously operated by Olympic Airways. As previously mentioned, Olympic Airlines was established under Law 3185/2003, which deals specifically with the case of Olympic Airways/Olympic Airlines, and confers exemption from the provisions of Greek company law that would ordinarily apply.
(179) Olympic Airways was heavily indebted, and had previously been found by the Commission to have received illegal and incompatible State aid; the hive-off has removed Olympic Airways’ revenue-generating flight divisions, while very few of the corresponding liabilities have been transferred. All long-term debt has been left with the predecessor companies, and of the taxes, social security and other charges payable to the Greek State by the Olympic Airways group only one month’s liabilities have been transferred to Olympic Airlines. In addition to the tax liabilities owed directly to the Greek State, Olympic Airways had a liability to AIA of approximately EUR 93 million at the date of the hive-off. Under the terms of the hive-off none of this was transferred to Olympic Airlines; all of it remained with Olympic Airways.

(180) The Commission also concludes that as the privatisation process envisaged by Law 3185/2003 continues, the already heavily indebted Olympic Airways group will be left with no trading activities, minimal assets, and debts amounting to hundreds of millions of euro. It will therefore be even less likely to repay the incompatible State aid, as it is required to do by the 2002 Decision. It is the intention of the Greek authorities that the rules on insolvency should be applied to Olympic Airways and Olympic Aviation and that they should be liquidated. The costs would be borne by the creditors, principally the Greek State. The Commission observes that both Olympic Airways and Olympic Airlines are owned in their entirety by the Greek State, so that the establishment of Olympic Airlines is not so much a restructuring as an artificial reorganisation within a single group. This understanding of the matter is supported by an examination of Law 3185/2003, whereby Olympic Airlines obtains ‘protection’ from the ordinary provisions of the Greek Civil Code and Commercial Code in respect of debts contracted by Olympic Airways before the hive-off of the flight division. The implication is that in the absence of the special legislation the application of the ordinary domestic law would also lead to the conclusion that there was continuity between the two companies.

(181) The Commission further observes that the classification of Olympic Airlines as a successor to Olympic Airways was explicitly acknowledged by Greece in its letter to the Commission of 2 June 2005, in which it referred to Olympic Airlines as a ‘successor company’ to Olympic Airways for the purposes of recovery.

(182) The Court of Justice has also considered the transfer of assets to Olympic Airlines, which is the essential component in the restructuring, in its judgement in Case C-415/03 Commission v Greece. The Court there found that ‘the operation in issue transferred all the assets of the company Olympic Airways, free of all debts, to the new company Olympic Airlines … that operation was structured in such a way as to make it impossible, under national law, to recover the debts of the former company Olympic Airways from the new company Olympic Airlines’ (12). It added that ‘the operation created an obstacle to the effective implementation of Decision 2003/372/EC [the 2002 Decision] and to the recovery of the aid by means of which the Greek State had supported the commercial activities of that company. The purpose of that decision, which aims to restore undistorted competition in the civil aviation sector, was thus seriously compromised’. Thus the Court concluded that the essential aim of the restructuring operation was artificially to insulate the flying divisions of Olympic Airways from what had happened before.

(183) It is therefore clear that the restructuring of Olympic Airways in 2003 that established Olympic Airlines, while it did lead to the creation of a separate legal entity, was nevertheless carried out so as to avoid recovery under the 2002 Decision, and that Olympic Airlines is a successor company to Olympic Airways at least for the purposes of the recovery of State aid granted before the hive-off.

(ii) Has Olympic Airlines received State aid since it was established?

(184) The experts concluded that Olympic Airlines had been losing money since it was established. With regard to the points raised when the procedure was initiated, the experts found that since it was established Olympic Airlines had made all required payments of the spatosimo tax; on the issue of ground handling and maintenance services provided by Olympic Airways to Olympic Airlines, the Commission does not have enough information to be able to take a view on whether there is any element of State aid. With regard to tax and social security, the experts found that except for some delayed payments (which had incurred penalties) Olympic Airlines had met its obligations.

(185) As far as spatosimo and tax and social security obligations are concerned, therefore, the Commission concludes that Olympic Airlines has not received State aid since it came into being. However, during their examination of the company’s books the experts found that Olympic Airlines had benefited from favourable terms from its suppliers in two respects.

(12) Paragraph 33 of the judgment.
(186) Olympic Airlines subleases aircraft from Olympic Airways, from Olympic Aviation and, in the case of four finance leases, direct from the Greek State. The experts showed that in all cases the sublease rates were lower than those charged under the head leases concluded with the head lessors. In the case of the four finance leases, the Greek State was losing between EUR 250 000 and EUR 350 000 on each aircraft each month. In the case of the aircraft subleased to Olympic Airlines by Olympic Airways, the difference between what Olympic Airlines paid and what Olympic Airways paid meant that in 2004 Olympic Airways had lost EUR 37,6 million, or 55 % of the cost of the lease.

(187) In examining the relationship between Olympic Airlines and AIA, the Commission's experts came to the conclusion that allowing Olympic Airlines to build up debts of EUR [...] million over the winter season, and then to convert them into an eight-month short-term loan to be paid over the summer season, amounted to providing Olympic Airlines with seasonal working capital financing. This financing, together with continued tolerance of late payments, suggested that Olympic Airlines was receiving treatment from AIA that would not be available to other airlines.

(188) With regard to this favourable treatment the Commission can firstly conclude that the decision by the Greek authorities to sublease aircraft to Olympic Airlines at a loss of between EUR 250 000 and EUR 350 000 per aircraft per month is clearly a transfer of State resources from the State to Olympic Airlines. The measure reduces costs that Olympic Airlines would otherwise have to bear. The measure is specific, in that it is directed solely at Olympic Airlines, and it distorts or threatens to distort competition, in that Olympic Airlines operates in fully liberalised air transport market.

(189) It is settled case-law that no distinction is to be drawn between cases where aid is granted directly by the State and cases where it is granted by public or private bodies established or appointed by the State to administer the aid (10). However, for an advantage to be regarded as State aid within the meaning of Article 87(1) of the Treaty it must, first, be granted directly or indirectly through State resources (11), and, second, be imputable to the State (12). The Commission has therefore to decide whether the actions taken by Olympic Airways and AIA are imputable to the State. As discussed in paragraph 192 below, the imputability to the State of a measure taken by a public undertaking may be inferred from a set of indicators arising from the circumstances of the case and the context in which that measure was taken.

(190) With regard to AIA, notwithstanding Greece's insistence that the actions taken by Olympic Airways to sublease its aircraft to Olympic Airlines at prices significantly below those of the head leases, and by so doing to lose EUR 37,6 million, the Commission observes that the State held 100 % of the shares of both Olympic Airways and of Olympic Airlines. The management and the directors of both companies were appointed by the State. It has to be concluded that Olympic Airways and Olympic Airlines were (and still are) under the control of the State. Greece was able to exercise a dominant influence over both undertakings, both directly and indirectly, as Olympic Airways' largest creditor. Consequently, the decision by Olympic Airways to sublease aircraft to Olympic Airlines was not the act of an independent undertaking.

(191) The actions taken by Olympic Airways and AIA are imputable to the State. As discussed in paragraph 192 below, the imputability to the State of a measure taken by a public undertaking may be inferred from a set of indicators arising from the circumstances of the case and the context in which that measure was taken.

(192) With regard to AIA, notwithstanding Greece's insistence that it has no role to play in influencing AIA's commercial behaviour, the Commission observes that the State owns 55 % of AIA's share capital and appoints four of the nine directors. The Court of Justice has indicated other criteria that may be used in determining whether an aid measure taken by a public undertaking is imputable to the State (13). These include 'its integration into the structures of the public administration, the nature of its activities and the exercise of the latter on the market in normal conditions of competition with private operators, the legal status of the undertaking (in the sense of its being subject to public law or ordinary company law), the intensity of the supervision exercised by the public authorities over the management of the undertaking, or any other indicator showing, in the particular case, an involvement by the public authorities in the adoption of a measure or the unlikeliness of their not being involved, having regard also to the compass of the measure, its content or the conditions which it contains'. Although AIA is majority State-owned, it is operated as a private enterprise independent of the Greek State in its day-to-day business (only four of its nine directors are appointed by the State), and given that all debts owed by Olympic Airways/Olympic Airlines to AIA are repaid with interest and have been secured by mortgages on aircraft, the Commission cannot make a definitive finding that the actions of AIA are imputable to the State.

(11) v [1977] ECR 595,

Accordingly, the Commission finds that the lease arrangements between Olympic Airways and Olympic Airlines distort or threaten to distort competition, because they are specific, in that they favour one undertaking by freeing it from liabilities that it would otherwise have to bear. The Commission also observes that the measures affect trade between Member States and distort or threaten to distort competition in this market, as they involve a Community air carrier, as explained in paragraph 193. The Commission concludes that the lease arrangements whereby Olympic Airlines leases aircraft either from Olympic Airways or from the State constitute a grant of State aid to Olympic Airlines for the purposes of Article 87(1) of the Treaty.

(iii) What was the status of the cash ‘advance’ from the special account provided for under Law 3185/2003? How was the cash disbursed and spent? Who benefited from the cash disbursements?

The Commission can firstly conclude that this payment is a transfer of State resources (the money comes directly from the State budget and is expressly provided for in Article 27 of Law 3185/2003), and that it is an individual measure, as it is directed exclusively at Olympic Airways.

The Greek authorities contend that the grant of EUR 130 312 459 to Olympic Airways was the act of a prudent investor. According to the relevant Community case-law, the conduct of the State as a public investor has to be compared to that of a notional private investor who is guided by prospects of profitability in the long term (18). A capital increase needed to ensure the survival of a company which is experiencing temporary difficulties, but which after taking appropriate restructuring measures is in a position to return to profitability, does not necessarily constitute State aid if a private investor would have reached the same conclusion. The Court of Justice has also indicated that there is no State aid where a capital increase takes place on terms that would be acceptable to a private investor operating under normal market conditions (19).

At the time when the sum of EUR 130 312 459 was advanced to Olympic Airways, Olympic Airways was already in a very difficult financial situation. In the 2002 Decision the Commission had found that the company had received illegal and incompatible State aid, and had ordered that the aid be recovered with interest. Olympic Airways had just been deprived of its flight divisions, and had been left with most of the liabilities which would normally attach to those divisions. At the end of 2003 Olympic Airways owed the Greek State a total of EUR 522 million in unpaid tax and social security liabilities. Given its financial position, the Commission has to take the view that Olympic Airways would manifestly have been unable to obtain a comparable cash advance from a private investor in the same situation. This is so particularly as the ‘investor’ in the present case was also Olympic Airways’ largest creditor, and stood little realistic chance of recovering the sums that Olympic Airways already owed it. Such a creditor would not have allowed a situation where the debts continued to increase while the assets that might have been used to satisfy these debts disappeared (19). On the contrary, a private creditor would have taken all legal steps to obtain payment of the arrears or to enforce its guarantees. The Commission cannot therefore agree with the Greece’s contention that advancing the sum in question to Olympic Airways was the act of a prudent investor.

The Commission must then consider whether, as the Greek authorities initially contended, the sum of EUR 130 312 459 can be considered to be a form of compensation to Olympic Airways by the State for the assets which had been taken from Olympic Airways and vested in the State in Olympic Airlines. In order to assess the validity of this argument, the Commission has to examine the value of the assets taken from Olympic Airways and transferred to Olympic Airlines. According to the valuation carried out by Olympic Airways management, the value of the assets transferred to Olympic Airlines amounted to EUR 130 312 459. If this were so, there would be no State aid in the transfer of the money to Olympic Airways, as no advantage would be conferred on Olympic Airways.

The Commission finds it significant here that Olympic’s own auditors, Deloitte & Touche, expressed reservations in the annual accounts for the year ending 31 December 2003 with respect to the valuation of assets retained and transferred between Olympic Airways and Olympic Airlines. The auditors stated that they were not in a position to confirm the value of goodwill, fixed assets at valuation and debtors and creditors transferred from the component companies to Olympic Airlines, and therefore did not express an opinion on them.

(199) In the study they carried out for the Commission, the experts convincingly demonstrated that the assets transferred to Olympic Airlines had been overvalued. Accordingly, on the instructions of the Commission, the experts carried out their own valuation of the assets transferred, using accountancy techniques and standards which are accepted both in Greece and internationally. They concluded that the value of the net assets transferred to Olympic Airlines was not in the order of EUR 130 million, but instead was approximately EUR 38 million. The Commission has carefully examined the data and methodology used by the experts, and shares their analysis on this point. The Commission concludes that the value of the assets transferred was overstated by approximately EUR 91.5 million.

(200) Despite the fact that in order to obtain a completely accurate assessment of the amounts concerned there would have to be a full audit of all the assets and liabilities, therefore, the Commission can estimate that the amount overstated is in the order of EUR 91.5 million.

(201) Having decided this point, the Commission observes that the overvaluation is specific, as it expressly provides money directly to Olympic Airways, and that it confers an advantage on the company, as it is to be used to cover severance payments and other expenses for the retirement, in whatever manner, of the employees, and to cover the financial obligations of Olympic Airways and Olympic Aviation in the course of the conversion and liquidation (20) in order to ‘cover its financial obligations’. The Commission observes incidentally that this provision was interpreted broadly, and that the sum in question was used to pay for general Olympic Airways operating costs: over EUR 51 million of the sum advanced was used to pay for aircraft leases.

(202) The Commission also concludes that the measure distorts or threatens to distort competition and affects trade between Member States, as it involves a company which is in competition with other Community companies, especially since the entry into force of Council Directive 96/67/EC of 15 October 1996 on access to the ground handling market at Community airports, where ground handling is declared open to competition in airports with an annual threshold of 2 million passengers or 50 000 tonnes of freight (23). The Commission must therefore conclude that the amount by which the assets transferred to Olympic Airlines were overvalued and which has been paid to Olympic Airways amounts to a grant of State aid to Olympic Airways within the meaning of Article 87(1) of the Treaty.

(203) The experts have shown that since the date of the last Commission Decision concerning Olympic Airways (12 December 2002), and since the split from Olympic Airlines, Olympic Airways has received cash advances from the State, and its tax and social security liabilities to the State have increased.

(204) It is clear that the repayments of EUR 36 945 357 on the ABN Amro loan, the A340 finance lease payments of EUR 11 774 684 and the direct cash funding of EUR 8.2 million to Olympic Airways involved direct transfers of State resources to Olympic Airways. For the reasons explained in paragraph 7, these measures are new illegal and incompatible aid measures, in so far as they are not a mere execution of guarantees that the Greek State had given previously. As has already been explained in the examination of the ‘advance’ paid to Olympic Airways, even though the State has registered these amounts with the tax authorities as a claim against Olympic Airways, and even though they are recorded in Olympic Airways’ books as tax liabilities, the State stands little or no realistic chance of ever securing their repayment, and thus cannot be said to have been acting in a rational or commercial manner when the payments were made.

(205) Olympic Airways’ (Olympic Airways Services) difficult and deteriorating tax and social security situation has already been described. At the end of 2002 its tax and social security liability was already large, at EUR 273 million. The liability has continued to grow significantly over the period since then. At the end of 2004 the estimated liability was EUR 627 million, so that in the period covered by the present Decision Olympic Airways’ liability to the State has increased by EUR 354 million.

(206) With regard to Olympic Airways’ mounting tax liabilities, it is the State itself, through the tax administration, which tolerates the constant deferral and non-payment of various taxes and charges owed by Olympic Airways. Social security contributions are collected by IKA, a public body established by Greek law (27) which has been made responsible, under State supervision, for managing the social security system and collecting mandatory social security contributions. It has the right to conclude settlement agreements for late payments of debts (23), but is not required to do so. The ever-increasing tax liability of Olympic Airways to the State is therefore, clearly imputable to the State.

(20) Article 27(5)(b) of Law 3185/2003.
(22) Law 1846/1951, Article 11.
The Commission must now consider whether this forbearance involves a transfer of State resources. The concept of State aid encompasses not only positive benefits but also measures that reduce normal charges; so that the State’s failure to act to enforce its claims clearly does involve such a transfer.

Having established that a transfer of resources imputable to the State has taken place, the Commission must determine whether this aid distorts competition. The Commission takes the view that both the grants of direct aid and the State’s failure to act to collect outstanding debts give Olympic Airways a significant commercial advantage over its competitors. In its dealings with Olympic Airways the State has not been acting in a rational and commercial manner. As explained in paragraph 209, there is accordingly a distortion of competition within a liberalised sector of the internal market. The Commission must therefore conclude that both the forbearance of the State concerning Olympic Airways’ unpaid and mounting tax and social security liabilities and the payments made by the State in Olympic Airways’ place constitute State aid to Olympic Airways within the meaning of Article 87(1) of the Treaty.

6.3. COMPATIBILITY OF THE AID

(i) Compatibility of aid granted to Olympic Airlines

Having reached the conclusion that Olympic Airlines has received State aid since it was established, the Commission must now examine the measures in favour of Olympic Airlines in the light of Article 87(2) and (3) of the Treaty, which provide for exemptions to the general incompatibility declared in Article 87(1).

The exemptions in Article 87(2) of the Treaty cannot apply in the present case: the aid does not have a social character and is not granted to individual consumers, nor does it make good the damage caused by natural disasters or exceptional occurrences, nor is it granted to the economy of certain areas of the Federal Republic of Germany affected by the division of Germany.

Further exemptions to the general prohibition on State aid are set out in Article 87(3). The exemptions in Articles 87(3)(b) and 87(3)(d) do not apply in this case: the aid does not promote the execution of an important project of common European interest or remedy a serious disturbance in the economy of a Member State, nor does it promote culture and heritage conservation.

Article 87(3)(a) and (c) of the Treaty provide for the exemption of aid intended to promote the economic development of areas where the standard of living is abnormally low or where there is serious under-employment. Greece is a region falling in its entirety within the scope of Article 87(3)(a).

With regard to aviation services the Commission considers that the objectives of regional aid are as a rule achieved more easily through the imposition of public service obligations. Public service obligations are imposed by the Greek State on companies offering services between islands and between the mainland and the islands, and on some ‘thin’ routes services are contracted out by the State to an airline that receives compensation for providing them. In general the Commission considers that compensation for public service obligations is necessary, targeted support, and that provided that the operator is chosen by a transparent and non-discriminatory procedure and does not receive overcompensation such State support does not as a rule give rise to issues of incompatible State aid. This was the case with the contracts operated by Olympic Aviation. Under the terms of the restructuring these routes are now operated by Olympic Airlines as the ‘successor’ company. Having regard to the limited information at its disposal, the Commission cannot rule out the possibility that the manner in which the public service contracts were transferred from Olympic Aviation to Olympic Airlines failed to comply with the procedures laid down for public service obligations by Council Regulation (EEC) No 2408/92 of 23 July 1992 on access for Community air carriers to intra-Community air routes (24). But in any event Greece cannot invoke the exemption in Article 87(3)(a) in respect of the sums granted to Olympic Airlines since its establishment.

Article 87(3)(c) of the Treaty provides for the exemption of aid intended to promote the economic development of certain economic activities, where such aid does not adversely affect trading conditions to an extent contrary to the common interest, and the Commission must now consider whether this provision can apply to the present case. In carrying out this examination the Commission has to have regard to the applicable guidelines on State aid in the aviation sector (25) and State aid for rescuing and restructuring firms in difficulty (26).

With regard to the aid granted to Olympic Airlines by means of the reduced cost of aircraft leases, the Commission will refer once again to the guidelines on State aid to the aviation sector. Paragraph 14 of the guidelines states that 'Direct aids aimed at covering operating losses are, in general, not compatible with the common market and may not benefit from an exemption’ from the general prohibition of State aid. The guidelines go on to specify that direct operational subsidisation of air routes can only be accepted in the case of public service obligations and of aid having a social character granted to individual consumers.

In the present case the aid granted to Olympic Airlines, either directly by the Greek State through its leases or indirectly via Olympic Airways, cannot fall within either of the acceptable categories of operational subsidisation of air routes. It is also settled law that new aid cannot be compatible with the common market as long as aid which has previously held to be unlawful has not been repaid, since the cumulative effect of the aid measures would be to distort competition in the common market to a significant extent (27). For the reasons set out above, Olympic Airlines is the successor to Olympic Airways' flight division, and therefore its successor for the purposes of recovery, so that new aid to Olympic Airlines cannot be compatible as long as the earlier aid remains unrecovered. Additionally, the grant of aid is an infringement of previous commitments given by Greece not to grant any further aid to Olympic Airways, and by extension to successor companies (Article 1(e) of the 1994 Decision).

Although the Greek authorities have not argued that the sums received by Olympic Airlines since its establishment arise as a result of the restructuring operation, and even though the Commission has concluded that Olympic Airlines is a successor company to Olympic Airways at least for the purposes of recovery of State aid granted prior to the hive-off, for the sake of completeness the Commission will additionally examine the aid granted to Olympic Airlines in the light of the rescue and restructuring guidelines of 1999. Point 7 of those guidelines states that for the purposes of the guidelines a newly created firm is not eligible for rescue or restructuring aid even if its initial financial position is insecure: this aid is consequently not covered by the guidelines.

Thus the aid granted to Olympic Airlines since its establishment does not satisfy the tests for exemption under Article 87(3)(c). The Commission finds that Greece has unlawfully granted non-notified new aid to Olympic Airlines by means of the discounted subleases concluded with Olympic Airlines.

(ii) (a) Compatibility of aid granted to Olympic Airways

Having concluded that the amount by which the assets transferred to Olympic Airlines were overvalued, and which was subsequently paid by the Greek State to Olympic Airways, amounts to a grant of State aid to Olympic Airways, the Commission must examine the measure in the light of Article 87(2) and (3) of the Treaty, which provide for exemptions to the general incompatibility declared in Article 87(1).

The exemptions in Article 87(2) of the Treaty cannot apply in the present case: the aid does not have a social character and is not granted to individual consumers, nor does it make good the damage caused by natural disasters or exceptional occurrences, nor is it granted to the economy of certain areas of the Federal Republic of Germany affected by the division of Germany.

Further exemptions to the general prohibition on State aid are set out in Article 87(3). The exemptions in Articles 87(3)(b) and 87(3)(d) do not apply in this case: the aid does not promote the execution of an important project of common European interest or remedy a serious disturbance in the economy of a Member State, nor does it promote culture and heritage conservation.

Article 87(3)(a) and (c) of the Treaty provide for the exemption of aid intended to promote the economic development of areas where the standard of living is abnormally low or where there is serious underemployment. Although Greece is a region that falls in its entirety within the scope of Article 87(3)(a), this provision cannot apply, for the reasons set out in paragraph 211.

Article 87(3)(c) of the Treaty provides for the exemption of 'aid to facilitate the development of certain economic activities, where such aid does not adversely affect trading conditions to an extent contrary to the common interest', and the Greek authorities have requested the Commission, in the event that it should conclude that the advance is not the action of a market economy investor and therefore has to be seen as State aid within the meaning of Article 87(1) of the Treaty, to consider whether the measure can be considered to constitute rescue aid.

(b) Possible rescue aid

(224) The sum in question was disbursed between December 2003 and May 2004, and the applicable guidelines for deciding on compatibility are therefore the Community guidelines on State aid for rescuing and restructuring firms in difficulty of 1999. Under point 104 of the rescue and restructuring guidelines of 2004 (28), the 1999 guidelines apply where the aid was granted prior to 10 October 2004.

(c) Application of the 1999 rescue and restructuring guidelines

(225) Point 4 of the 1999 guidelines states that 'There is no Community definition of what constitutes a “firm in difficulty” ... the Commission regards a firm as being in difficulty when it is unable, whether through its own resources or with the funds it is able to obtain from its owners/shareholders or creditors, to stem losses which, without outside intervention by the public authorities, will almost certainly condemn it to go out of business in the short or medium term.'

(226) The guidelines go on to say that 'a firm is, in any event and irrespective of its size, regarded as being in difficulty for the purposes of these Guidelines: (a) in the case of a limited company, where more than half of its registered capital has disappeared and more than one quarter of that capital has been lost over the preceding 12 months'.

(227) Point 6 also states that 'The usual signs of a firm being in difficulty are increasing losses, diminishing turnover, growing stock inventories, excess capacity, declining cash flow, mounting debt, rising interest charges and falling or nil net asset value.'

(d) Conditions for the authorisation of rescue aid

(229) The 1999 Community guidelines on State aid for rescuing and restructuring firms in difficulty lay down five conditions all of which must be met if rescue aid is to be granted. The Commission must verify whether all of these conditions are satisfied in the present case.

(230) First, rescue aid ‘must consist of liquidity support in the form of loan guarantees or loans. In both cases, the loan must be granted at an interest rate at least comparable to those observed for loans to healthy firms, and in particular the reference rates adopted by the Commission; any loan must be reimbursed and any guarantee must come to an end within a period of not more than six months after the disbursement of the first instalment to the firm’.

(231) In the present case the rescue aid takes the form of a cash grant (described as an ‘advance’) of EUR 130 312 450 given by Greece to Olympic Airways and Olympic Aviation, ostensibly to assist these two companies in their restructuring following the hive-off of their flight activities and the establishment of Olympic Airlines. No loan interest is to be charged to Olympic Airways and Olympic Aviation, and it is intended that the sum of EUR 130 312 450 will be paid back to the State directly from the sales proceeds of the privatisation of Olympic Airlines, a company which Greece insists is outside the ownership of the Olympic Airways group. If the sale of Olympic Airlines does not generate sufficient funds to reimburse this ‘advance’, other assets of Olympic Airways will be sold to make up the difference. In these circumstances it is not possible to conclude that the first condition of the 1999 rescue and restructuring guidelines is met.

(232) Second, the aid must ‘be linked to loans that are to be reimbursed over a period of not more than twelve months after disbursement of the last instalment to the firm’. As indicated above, the sum in question here cannot properly be described as a loan to Olympic Airways and Olympic Aviation, as repayment is contingent on the sale of another company. The sum of EUR 130 312 450 was paid out in instalments, depending on the needs of Olympic Airways and Olympic Aviation, over a period from 24 December 2003 to 13 May 2004. To date, more than a year later, there has been no reimbursement, so the second condition is not satisfied. Given that the measure has failed to satisfy the first two conditions, further examination of the other three conditions would be redundant.

(28) OJ C 244, 1.10.2004, p. 2.
The Commission must also consider the other measures which it has decided here amount to State aid, namely the grants totalling almost EUR 57 million given by the Greek State to Olympic Airways, and the forbearance shown by the State towards Olympic Airways, which has seen Olympic Airways' tax and social security liabilities rise from EUR 273 million at the end of 2002, when the restructuring took place, to EUR 627 million at the end of 2004. The exemptions provided for in Articles 87(2) and 87(3)(a), (b) and (d) of the Treaty cannot apply to Olympic Airways (see paragraphs 219 to 221), and the Commission must now assess whether the exemption in Article 87(3)(c) can apply.

As explained above, any new aid to Olympic Airways infringes previous commitments not to grant any further aid (Article 1(e) of the 1994 Decision). More importantly, in considering the new unlawful aid it has to be borne in mind that Olympic Airways has already received aid in the past, so that there is a clear breach of the ‘one-time-last-time’ principle laid down in the guidelines on State aid to the aviation sector and State aid for rescuing and restructuring firms in difficulty. The Commission also observes that in accordance with the case-law of the Court of Justice new aid cannot be compatible with the common market as long as aid which it has previously held to be unlawful has not been repaid (29). The new aid granted here, therefore, does not satisfy the tests for exemption under Article 87(3)(c).

88 provisions of the 2002 Decision were sufficiently clear and unambiguous: ‘Article 1. The restructuring aid granted by Greece to Olympic Airways in the form of … (b) new loan guarantees totalling USD 378 million for loans to be contracted before 31 March 2001 for the purchase of new aircraft and for investment necessary for the relocation of Olympic Airways to the new airport in Spata … is considered to be incompatible with the common market within the meaning of Article 87(1) of the Treaty’.

With regard to the obligation to recover, the 2002 Decision distinguished between the period 1994–1998 and the period 1998–2002. As far as the period 1994–1998 was concerned, the Commission decided under Article 14(1) of Regulation (EC) No 659/1999 (30) that no recovery was necessary for aid granted before 14 August 1998. But the State granted the guarantees at issue here well after that date (in October 1999 for the four aircraft and in February 2001 for the ABN Amro loan).

In any event, the Commission points out that if a measure is to constitute the mere execution of a claim under a State guarantee given previously, rather than a grant of new aid, it must comply fully with the terms of the original guarantee (such as the identity of the beneficiary, the deadlines, the amount covered, the need of a prior declaration of bankruptcy, etc.). If a Member State makes a payment in respect of a guaranteed loan under conditions other than those initially agreed at the granting stage, the Commission will regard the payment as new aid which has to be notified under Article 88(3) (31).

For the sake of precision, it appears that the payments recently made by the Greek State in respect of the above-mentioned loans did not comply with the conditions laid down in the original guarantees as described by the Greek authorities at the time. For instance:

The Commission must also consider the other measures which it has decided here amount to State aid, namely the grants totalling almost EUR 57 million given by the Greek State to Olympic Airways, and the forbearance shown by the State towards Olympic Airways, which has seen Olympic Airways' tax and social security liabilities rise from EUR 273 million at the end of 2002, when the restructuring took place, to EUR 627 million at the end of 2004. The exemptions provided for in Articles 87(2) and 87(3)(a), (b) and (d) of the Treaty cannot apply to Olympic Airways (see paragraphs 219 to 221), and the Commission must now assess whether the exemption in Article 87(3)(c) can apply.

As explained above, any new aid to Olympic Airways infringes previous commitments not to grant any further aid (Article 1(e) of the 1994 Decision). More importantly, in considering the new unlawful aid it has to be borne in mind that Olympic Airways has already received aid in the past, so that there is a clear breach of the ‘one-time-last-time’ principle laid down in the guidelines on State aid to the aviation sector and State aid for rescuing and restructuring firms in difficulty. The Commission also observes that in accordance with the case-law of the Court of Justice new aid cannot be compatible with the common market as long as aid which it has previously held to be unlawful has not been repaid (29). The new aid granted here, therefore, does not satisfy the tests for exemption under Article 87(3)(c).

The Commission concludes that by overvaluing the assets transferred to Olympic Airlines Greece has granted illegal and incompatible State aid to Olympic Airways to the amount of the overvaluation. It also finds that the grants totalling almost EUR 57 million to Olympic Airways and the Greek State's tolerance of late payment and non-payment of Olympic Airways' tax and social security liabilities constitute illegal and incompatible State aid.

7. LEGITIMATE EXPECTATIONS AND STATE GUARANTEES

Greece made several repayments in respect of the four finance leases on A340-300 aircraft and the loan from ABN Amro; the guarantees for these loans from the State to Olympic Airways predate the 2002 Decision. Greece contends that the 2002 Decision did not explicitly call for the suspension or termination of guarantees granted by the Greek State to Olympic Airways after 1998, and that this implicitly means that the Commission accepted their continuation and any payments made under them. The Commission cannot accept this assertion, for the following reasons.

The Commission is of the opinion that the substantive provisions of the 2002 Decision were sufficiently clear and unambiguous: ‘Article 1. The restructuring aid granted by Greece to Olympic Airways in the form of … (b) new loan guarantees totalling USD 378 million for loans to be contracted before 31 March 2001 for the purchase of new aircraft and for investment necessary for the relocation of Olympic Airways to the new airport in Spata … is considered to be incompatible with the common market within the meaning of Article 87(1) of the Treaty’.

With regard to the obligation to recover, the 2002 Decision distinguished between the period 1994–1998 and the period 1998–2002. As far as the period 1994–1998 was concerned, the Commission decided under Article 14(1) of Regulation (EC) No 659/1999 (30) that no recovery was necessary for aid granted before 14 August 1998. But the State granted the guarantees at issue here well after that date (in October 1999 for the four aircraft and in February 2001 for the ABN Amro loan).

In any event, the Commission points out that if a measure is to constitute the mere execution of a claim under a State guarantee given previously, rather than a grant of new aid, it must comply fully with the terms of the original guarantee (such as the identity of the beneficiary, the deadlines, the amount covered, the need of a prior declaration of bankruptcy, etc.). If a Member State makes a payment in respect of a guaranteed loan under conditions other than those initially agreed at the granting stage, the Commission will regard the payment as new aid which has to be notified under Article 88(3) (31).

For the sake of precision, it appears that the payments recently made by the Greek State in respect of the above-mentioned loans did not comply with the conditions laid down in the original guarantees as described by the Greek authorities at the time. For instance:

(29) Case C-355/95 Deggendorf, cited above.

(30) ‘The Commission shall not require recovery of the aid if this would be contrary to a general principle of Community law.’

— As regards the ABN Amro loan, the Government paid instalments of around EUR 36 million direct, in place of the undertaking, without a prior default and without a prior legal declaration of bankruptcy or insolvency. The fact that the Government subsequently asked the company to pay the money back shows that the payment was not a mere execution of claims under a guarantee granted in the past.

— The same considerations apply to the loans relating to the aircraft finance lease payments of around EUR 11 million and to the direct cash funding of around EUR 8 million.

— Moreover, the loan contracts for the four aircraft were formally amended (by novation) so that the State replaced the undertaking as recipient of the loans. These very substantial changes predated the payments at issue here.

— The advance of EUR 8 million pending the amendment of two of the lease contracts was clearly not a measure envisaged in the original guarantee.

(241) In so far as there were changes, and in so far as the changes were never notified to the Commission nor approved by the Commission, these payments clearly constitute new unlawful aid. When this Decision is being enforced, however, the Commission is prepared to examine any further submissions that may be made by the Greek authorities concerning the payment of around EUR 36 million of the instalments of the ABN Amro loan or the payment of around EUR 11 million under the lease contract for the acquisition of the four aircraft, and the compatibility or otherwise of all or part of these payments with the terms of the original guarantees,

HAS ADOPTED THIS DECISION:

Article 1

1. The acceptance by Olympic Airways and by Greece of aircraft sublease payments from Olympic Airlines which are lower than the amounts paid under the head leases, resulting in losses borne by Olympic Airways in the order of EUR 37 million in 2004 and by the State in the order of EUR 2.75 million up to May 2005, constitutes illegal State aid to Olympic Airlines that is incompatible with the Treaty.

2. Greece has granted illegal and incompatible State aid to Olympic Airways to the amount by which it overvalued the assets of Olympic Airlines when Olympic Airlines was established; this figure is provisionally estimated by the Commission to be approximately EUR 91.5 million.

3. The granting by the Greek State to Olympic Airways of sums totalling approximately EUR 8 million, and the additional payment by the Greek State of certain bank loan and finance lease instalments in place of Olympic Airways, between May 2004 and March 2005, to the extent that these payments do not constitute the mere execution of a claim under the guarantees referred to in Article 1(b) of Decision 2003/372/CE and of the related conditions, constitutes illegal State aid to Olympic Airways that is incompatible with the Treaty.

4. The continued forbearance of the Greek State towards Olympic Airways in relation to tax and social security debts to the State amounting to some EUR 354 million between December 2002 and December 2004 constitutes illegal State aid to Olympic Airways that is incompatible with the Treaty.

Article 2

1. Greece shall recover from the recipients thereof the aid referred to in Article 1.

2. Recovery shall be effected without delay and in accordance with the procedures of national law provided they allow the immediate and effective enforcement of this Decision. The aid to be recovered shall include interest from the date on which it was at the disposal of the recipient until the date of its recovery. Interest shall be calculated on the basis of the reference rate used for calculating the grant equivalent of regional aid.

Article 3

Greece shall immediately suspend all further payments of aid to Olympic Airways and Olympic Airlines.

Article 4

Greece shall inform the Commission within a period of two months from the date of notification of the present Decision of the measures taken to comply with Articles 2 and 3.

Article 5

This Decision is addressed to the Hellenic Republic.
