

[Seeing more information about your document – transcript]

In this video we will look at the 'Document information' tab of the document page.

It gives detailed information about the document you are consulting. The information varies according to the type of act you are consulting.

In general, you can see the dates of the document (for example when it was signed and when it entered into force), its author or authors, what kind of document it is (for example a regulation or a directive), the procedure that led to its adoption, and its legal basis.

Clicking on one of these four links will bring you to a results list that displays:

all the documents that are based on the document you are viewing;

all the implementing acts that are based on it;

all the delegated acts that are based on it; or

all the documents that mention the document.

You can also see and access:

all the acts that the document you are consulting modifies;

all the acts that modify the document; and corrigenda, if any, in one or more languages.

Just below you can see and access the case-law that affects the act as well as all the instruments that are cited in the document.

Finally, the 'classification' box lists all the subject areas the document belongs to. Click on the links to find all the documents that belong to one of the specific categories. The three classifications, directory code, subject matter and EuroVoc descriptors correspond to different subject classifications that have been applied to documents over time. The latest classification type is the EuroVoc descriptor. There is a specific search function that allows you to browse by EuroVoc subjects.

The boxes that follow are explained in the video on interacting with a document.

That's all for the 'Document information' tab of the document page.
