(Case C-468/01 P)

(2002/C 68/03)

An appeal against the judgment delivered on 19 September 2001 by the Second Chamber of the Court of First Instance of the European Communities in case T-117/00 between Procter & Gamble Company and Office for Harmonisation in the Internal Market (Trade Marks and Designs) (OHIM) was brought before the Court of Justice of the European Communities on 6 December 2001 by Procter & Gamble Company, established in Cincinnati, Ohio (United States of America), represented by C.J.J.C. van Nispen and G. - in failing to assess whether the specific pattern (speckles and/or layers) of the colours was already part of the usual get up(s) of the tablets on the market at the relevant date and, if not, whether the difference is perceptible, rendering it apt to confer distinctive character on the Marks.

The Appellant claims that the Court should:

- annul the judgment
- order the OHIM to pay the costs both at first instance and on appeal.

Pleas in law and main arguments

The Appellant submits that the Court of First Instance erred in the following respects:

- in deeming it unnecessary to decide whether the distinctive character of the Mark should be assessed by reference to the date on which the application for registration is filed or the date of actual registration;
- in holding that the level of attention given by the average consumer to the shape and colours of washing machine and dishwasher tablets is not high;
- in deeming it appropriate to ascertain whether the Marks applied for will enable the members of the public targeted to distinguish the products from those having a different trade origin when they come to select a product for purchase;
- in holding that the slightly rounded corners of the tablet are not likely to be perceived by the average consumer as a distinctive feature of the shape claimed, capable of distinguishing it from other washing machine or dishwasher tablets and in failing to assess whether such slightly rounded corners were already part of the usual get up(s) of the tablets on the market at the relevant date and, if not, whether the difference is perceptible, rendering it apt to confer distinctive character on the Marks;
- in failing to assess whether the colours as applied to Marks were already part of the usual get up(s) of the tablets on the market at the relevant date and, if not, whether the difference is perceptible, rendering it apt to confer distinctive character on the Marks;
