Glossary of summaries

ELECTRONIC COMMUNICATION SERVICES
According to EU law (Directive 2002/21/EC), electronic communications services are services provided by means of electronic signals over, for example, telecommunications or broadcasting networks.
The term, however, excludes:

- services controlling editorial content and
- information society services which do not involve the transmission of signals.

SEE ALSO
- Electronic communications
- Electronic communications networks
- Information society
- Trans-European Networks (TEN)
- Universal service
- Summary on data protection in the electronic communications sector
- Summary on the regulatory framework for electronic communications
- Summary on the authorisation of electronic communications networks and services
- Summary on access to electronic communications networks
- Summary on competition in electronic communications and services
- European Commission Telecoms Rules website